SRI LANKA's war on terror

The battle against one of the most brutal terrorist organizations in the world – the Tamil Tigers

After more than a quarter century of atrocities committed by one of the most violent terrorist organizations in the world — the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE or the Tamil Tigers) — in 2009, the Sri Lankan government, with active support from the international community, achieved what few other countries in recent history can claim: putting an end to a bloody separatist and terrorist organization and bringing peace to the nation. Much of the world is relieved to see the long suffering of ordinary Sri Lankans end, and today, Sri Lanka has emerged as the fastest growing economy in South Asia, outpacing all its neighbors, including India.

Thirty Years of Human Rights Atrocities by the Tamil Tigers

The pioneers of the suicide vest, the Tamil Tigers were the first terrorist masterminds to use women and children for suicide bombings. Considered one of the most brutal terrorist organizations in the world, the LTTE was declared a terrorist organization by 32 countries, including the United States, the European Union, Canada and India.

The Tamil Tigers possessed a well-developed militia and carried out high-profile attacks both in Sri Lanka and abroad. They are the only militant group to assassinate two world leaders: Sri Lankan President Ranasinghe Premadasa in 1993 and former Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in 1991.

At its core, the LTTE was a separatist organization and controlled much of Sri Lanka's northern territories. Their sympathizers, who represented less than 5 percent of Sri Lanka, inherently opposed Sri Lanka and wanted their own Tamil state, independent from the country's Buddhist, Hindu, Muslim and Christian population.

Over a 30-year period, the Tamil Tigers killed more than 100,000 people in Sri Lanka, including more than 8,000 fellow Tamils who they punished for being traitors for not following their radical militant ideology. They trampled upon the human rights of ordinary Sri Lankans, mostly the majority Sinhalese

The LTTE at a glance

- Pioneers of the suicide vest; first to use women and children for suicide bombings
- Killed an estimated 100,000 people in Sri Lanka (i.e. half a percentage of the entire population)
- Committed mass rapes, torture and abductions
- Declared a terrorist organization by 32 countries, including the United States and the EU
- Only terrorist group to have assassinated two world leaders
- Inherently secessionists, seeking to break away from Sri Lanka and form a Tamil state
- Sympathizers vying for a separate state continue to thrive outside Sri Lanka population, by committing mass rapes and torture. They forcibly enlisted young boys and girls from the Tamil population to join the war and used innocent citizens as shields to protect themselves from their own violence. It would be hard to find a single family in Sri Lanka that hasn't lost a loved one to their brutality.

In 2009, after nearly three decades of mass atrocities against the human rights of ordinary Sri Lankans, the government of Sri Lanka defeated the Tamil Tigers and eradicated terrorism from its own soil. However, LTTE sympathizers, who still vie for a separate breakaway Tamil state from Sri Lanka, continue to thrive outside Sri Lanka under various names and organizations.

The Final Phase Ending the War

After nearly three decades of terrorism, failed ceasefire treaties and mass atrocities by the Tamil Tigers, the government of Sri Lanka resolved to end its people's misery and launched an overpowering military offensive humanitarian operation against the Tamil Tigers. The government received international support for its efforts, including from the U.S. administration that provided political, military and other strategic support to help defeat the terrorists.

In 2006, a year after President Mahinda Rajapaksa took office, the Tamil Tigers in the Mavil Aru area in the eastern region of the country cut off the water supply used for drinking, agriculture and livelihood for nearly 50,000 people. This triggered the government's decision to send in national security forces for a fresh military offensive to free the area of the Tamil Tigers. The security forces succeeded in this operation and strengthened their protection to the strategically important Trincomalee Harbour. By July 2007, the forces liberated much of the Eastern Province from the grip of Tamil Tigers.

This success allowed the security forces to launch a major operation to free the northern region of the island from the Tamil Tigers' control. The government increased manpower, weapons and supplies for the security forces, raising the morale of the forces and leading them to repeated successes against the Tamil Tigers over the course of two years. By early 2009, the armed forces advanced significantly in the northern region, defeating the Tamil Tigers in their strongholds of Pooneryn, Kilinochchi, Elephant Pass and Mullaitivu.

However, in the final stages of the battle in May 2009, the Tamil Tigers demonstrated their ruthless nature by holding nearly 350,000 civilians as human shields, and later as hostages, for the protection of the Tigers leadership that was expecting to escape. At the time, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) requested and received the government's and the LTTE's permission to go in and provide relief support to the hostages. However, despite their assurances, the Tamil Tigers came in and starting shooting indiscriminately and killing both hostages as well as ICRC representatives.

A bus bombing in Mount Lavinia

At that moment, the government and the armed forces were pressed to make a swift decision on how to rescue the hostages. Ascertaining the situation at the time the security forces, with the government's approval, moved in and managed to rescue most of the people. Unfortunately, there was collateral damage during the operation that is determined to be approximately 4,600 casualties. But based on their intelligence, the government had reason to believe that if the security forces did not proceed with the rescue operation, the loss of innocent lives would have been significantly greater.

The then-U.S. ambassador, British High Commissioner, Indian ambassador and others were situated at the Sri Lankan Air Force headquarters to watch the final phase of the military operation live via UAV footage.

Rebuilding Sri Lanka

In the past five years since the minimization of terrorism, Sri Lanka has launched a massive impetus to increase the nation's economic growth. Large infrastructure development projects have been initiated such as the development and expansion of thermal and hydro power plants, ports, expressways and harbors. Today, the country's economic growth outperforms all its South Asia neighbors, and the country now ranks as the top South Asian nation to do business with in the World Bank's 2014 Doing Business Report.

At the same time, the government has also taken steps to bring the former LTTE-controlled territories to be part of mainstream Sri Lanka. After the war ended, the government put its energies behind basic humanitarian needs for the survivors and spent more than $4 billion in livelihood, schools, health, and transportation and infrastructure efforts in the region. Today, the economic growth in the northern, mostly Tamil region once devastated by the war stands at 23.8 percent.

For 40 years, not a single election was conducted in the northern region, so the government undertook measures to restore the right of franchise to the people and successfully held two elections — local and provincial. The Northern Province now has stable governing bodies led by the Tamil National Alliance. The government made an important commitment and has since resettled most of the nearly 300,000 internally displaced people (IDP) in the North under a resettlement and rehabilitation program. There are still some IDPs that need to be resettled, as they do not have any land — the government is presently working with the UN Refugees Agency to manage this. Additionally, the government has made efforts to reintroduce children forced to serve as LTTE soldiers into society, as well as 11,872 ex-combatants, within the first three months of peace.

In May 2010, the government created an independent Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission (LLRC) to study the cause of the conflict and action required to achieve post war reconciliation. After an 18-month inquiry, the LLRC made 185 recommendations, which were submitted to the parliament in 2011. The reconciliation and accountability process is currently underway.

The Missing Person's Commission has now already received more than 20,000 submissions and also recently written to the government of Sri Lanka asking for tactical assistance. The government is in the process of identifying internationally reputed personnel with extensive experience in this field. Certain eminent personalities have already been appointed.

The New Sri Lanka

- Growth rate - 7.3 percent, outperforming all South Asian neighbors
- Growth rate in the North — 23.8 percent
- Inflation rate fallen from 6.7 to 3.2 percent
- Unemployment rate fallen over the last decade from 9 to 4 percent
- 90 percent of households have electricity
- Tourism almost doubled in the last five years
- World Bank's 2014 Doing Business Report ranks Sri Lanka as the top South Asian nation for business

SRI LANKA'S WAR ON TERROR - Timeline of Events

- 1948 The nation of Ceylon becomes independent from British rule.
- May 1972 Ceylon becomes the Independent and Democratic Republic of Sri Lanka, where a majority of its population is Buddhist Sinhalese. The Hindu Tamils becomes the largest minority group in the country.
- 1976 Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam (LTTE), an ethnic terrorist group fighting for what they called "Eelam," a separate Tamil state, is formed. LTTE is fated to become one of the most dangerous terrorist groups in the world.
- 1981 After five years of brutality, the Sri Lankan government is forced to impose a state of emergency on the country to quell riots between Sinhalese and Tamils.
- 1983 The Tamil Tigers launch several guerrilla attacks, killing 13 Sri Lankan soldiers, which sparks the First Eelam War.
- 1987 In an attempt to create unity and peace after years of war, India drafts and implements an agreement with the Sri Lankan government to deploy Indian peace-keeping forces. The Tamil Tigers refuse to disarm.
- 1990 After three years of fighting with the Tamil Tigers, which ultimately kills 1,000 Indian peace keepers, India withdraws its remaining support. The Second Eelam War begins.
- May 1991 A Tamil Tigers suicide bomber assassinates former Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and 14 bystanders during a campaign rally prior to India's parliamentary elections.
- May 1993 Sri Lankan President Ranasinghe Premadasa is assassinated by a Tamil Tigers suicide bomber during a May Day rally, which also kills most of the President's bodyguards and close aides and wounds dozens of civilians and government officials.
- Nov. 1994 President Chandrika Kumaratunga comes to power, pledging to end the war and opening peace talks with the Tamil Tigers.
- April 1995 Peace talks fail when Tamil Tigers commandos sink two gunboats and declare end to a 14-week cease-fire, propelling Sri Lanka into the Third Eelam War.
- 1995-2001 The Tamil Tigers step up their attacks with ambushes, oil-depot explosions and wholesale massacres of villages. They execute bombings at Sri Lanka's holiest Buddhist site, central bank and international airport and ultimately wound President Kumaratunga during one such attack. Recognizing the 15 years of brutality the Tamil Tigers, the U.S. Department of State designates the Tamil Tigers as a foreign terrorist organization in October of 1997.
- 2002 In yet another attempt to secure peace and safety for its citizens, the Sri Lankan government signs a Norwegian-mediated ceasefire agreement with the Tamil Tigers.

- 2003 The Tamil Tigers pull out of peace talks, however the ceasefire holds.
- 2005 Continuing the violence, the Tamil Tigers attack and kill 45 Sri Lankan soldiers, sailors and policemen.
- 2006 During the Fourth Eelam War, the Tamil Tigers in Mavil Aru cut off water used for drinking, agriculture and livelihood for nearly 50,000 people in the East, forcing President Rajapaksa to use national security forces to free the area.
- January 2008 The Tamil Tigers escalate the war by bombing a military bus. In response, Sri Lanka officially withdraws from the truce and is forced to launch a military offensive.
- January 2009 Sri Lankan troops capture the town of Killinochchi, the Tamil Tigers' administrative headquarters.
- April 2009 The Sri Lankan government sets a 24 hour deadline for the Tamil Tigers rebels to surrender after they take nearly 350,000 civilians as human shields.
- May 2009 During the last battle of the war, as the army captures the last area of rebel-held territory in northern Sri Lanka, Tamil Tigers leader Velupillai Prabhakaran is killed. After decades of terrorism and tens of thousands of deaths, Tamil Tigers concede defeat and agree to lay down their arms.

The Sri Lankan government officially declares the conflict ended and begins a period of peace and reconciliation.

Biography

Sajin de Vass Gunawardena
Coordinating Secretary to the President
Monitoring Member of Parliament, Ministry of External Affairs
Government of Sri Lanka

The Honorable Sajin de Vass Gunawardena serves as Coordinating Secretary to Sri Lanka's President Mahinda Rajapaksa and as the External Affairs Ministry's Monitoring Member of Parliament. In his role, he is the official conduit between the President and the country's foreign ministry on all matters relating to trade and foreign relations. He is one of the senior members of the government. Mr. Gunawardena is also a member of the United People's Freedom Alliance (UPFA).

Shortly after President Rajapaksa was re-elected for his second term in 2010, Mr. Gunawardena was elected to Parliament, representing his native Galle district in Southern Sri Lanka. In addition to his role in the Rajapaksa administration, Mr. Gunawardena leads the Parliament's foreign relations efforts and also sits on several Consultative Committees, including: Petroleum Industries, Economic Development, Higher Education, Civil Aviation, Defense and Urban Development. Prior to his position in Parliament, Mr. Gunawardena was elected to the Southern Provincial Council in 2004 as Provincial Councilor in the coastal city Ambalangoda.

He is the former CEO of Mihin Lanka, a low-fare, state-owned airline. He originally began his career in the shipping industry at Hayleys, NYK Shipping Lines' maritime agency, before moving to Evergreen Shipping Lines and Trico International in Dubai.

Mr. Gunawardena was educated at the Royal College of Colombo. He currently resides in Colombo with his wife and two sons.

Human Rights in Sri Lanka

Sri Lanka's documented civilization goes back at least 2,600 years. Over the centuries, Sri Lanka has been home to people from diverse ethnicities, languages and religions. Ever since its ancient history, Sri Lanka has valued its traditions that valued equality and promoted human rights: Sri Lanka was the first Asian country known to have a female ruler, Queen Anula (47–42 BC); it was also the first country in the world to establish a dedicated hospital in Mihintale in the 4th century.

Sri Lanka's modern period is marked by the Colebrooke-Cameron reforms of 1833, which led to the introduction of a utilitarian and liberal political culture based on the rule of law and establishment of an Executive Council and Legislative Council. This later became the foundation of representative legislature in the country. These reforms also led to the modernizing of Sri Lanka's economic system and a public school model for education.

Sri Lanka has enjoyed uninterrupted democracy, including universal suffrage, since 1931. The country has been proud of its achievements in areas such as education — it has the highest literacy rates in South Asia, with nearly 99 percent for women — diversity, strong civil society and media, and religious freedoms.

But Sri Lanka also recognizes that nearly three decades of brutal terrorism was a significant setback for its human rights progress. The wreckage caused by the Tamil Tigers' terror — where more than 100,000 Sri Lankans (one half of one percent of its entire population) were killed and countless more were raped, maimed and tortured — will take time to heal.

After successfully ending terrorism in 2009, Sri Lanka restored the greatest human right — the right to life — and began its journey toward peace and prosperity. Today, the people of Sri Lanka are working hard to rebuild an inclusive society and restore human rights to their people.

Their journey has just begun. The country recognizes that a lot needs to be done to restore its human rights and bring the country back to its original trajectory. As a start, the following areas have seen significant great strides since 2009:

- Improving health conditions
- Strengthening women's rights
- Increasing freedom of the press
- Healing the wounds of war

Improving health conditions

Over the past decade, life expectancy in Sri Lanka has increased by nearly four years and the country has been elevated to "high" in the United Nation Development Program's Human Development Index. Further, according to the World Bank, both the maternal mortality rate and the infant mortality rate in Sri Lanka are well below .01 percent — well ahead of Sri Lanka's regional peers.

This is largely due not only to the onset of peace after many years of war, but the improved living conditions within the country, as well. For instance:

- Today, nearly 90 percent of all households have electricity.
- Water and sanitation facilities have been upgraded to UNICEF/CFS standards in 6,000 primary schools.
- Social Care Centers in the North and East have been created to provide integrated and ongoing care to the vulnerable.
- Nearly 32,000 disabled persons in two provinces alone were provided with assistance devices such as wheel chairs, crutches, eye glasses and other medical devices.
- Government Mobile Services issued Elder Identity Cards to more than 13,000 senior citizens in the North and East so they may benefit from priority health and other treatment and financial benefits.
- Nearly 4,000 households in the North and East with disabled family members have been given monthly cash allowances to help secure healthy standards of living.

According to a UNICEF report (link to report) "Improving Children's Lives, Transforming the Future – 25 years of child rights in South Asia," Sri Lanka's efforts to establish children's legally enforceable rights to health, education, protection and participation has significantly improved children's health and living conditions.

Strengthening women's rights

History shows that prior to the end of Sri Lanka's war on terrorism, the country enjoyed a long-standing history of equality for women. With universal suffrage since 1931, women are active participants in the operation of the government. The UK-based newspaper The Independent in 2012 called Sri Lanka the best place for a woman to be head of state. Also in 2012, the World Economic Forum's Gender Gap Report ranked Sri Lanka 22nd in the world for political empowerment of women.

The country also boasts an exceptional education rate for women. With nearly a 99 percent literacy rates among women, 72.6 percent of Sri Lanka's female population has access to secondary education, compared to 75.5 percent of males. And, since Sri Lanka's battle with the Tamil Tigers ended, women widowed by the fighting have been provided with vocational trainings and other courses as part of public livelihood programs.

Increasing freedom of the press

Sri Lanka stands for a free and fair press, unencumbered by government restrictions. Freedom of expression is a core tenet of democracy and Sri Lanka's government categorically supports it. The diversity of media coverage, including ongoing criticism of the government, is evidence of such freedoms; as is the fact that more than 90 percent of the media in Sri Lanka is affiliated with those in opposition to the current ruling political party – with more publications being bought by opposition leaders. The other approximate 10 percent is made up of three publicly owned, government-supported newspapers and two public television stations, similar to NPR and PBS in the United States.

At the same time, the wounds of a quarter century of brutal terrorism are still fresh in the country and the government will not allow political actors or supposed NGOs that are attempting to destabilize the nation to hide under the protection of journalists.

Healing the Wounds of War

Sri Lanka continues to work toward healing the wounds of war and rehabilitating ex-combatants. Some areas in which the government has made significant progress include:

1. Rehabilitating survivors – After the war, Sri Lanka had more than 300,000 internally displaced Tamil civilians whose situation needed to be immediately addressed. The government decided that it was in its people's best interest to first put its energy behind helping survivors, looking after their basic humanitarian needs — livelihood, schools, health, roads and infrastructure — and eventually their rehabilitation by helping their families rebuild their lives. Sri Lanka set up rehabilitation centers to provide artificial limbs and monthly allowances for those who were disabled during the fighting, as well as counseling and health clinics for the entire community.

Other aspects of the rehabilitation process that the government initiated include professional training courses in areas such as mechanical skills, IT, agriculture, food processing, carpentry and health clinics. In total, the government has spent more than $4 billion on infrastructure, investment, jobs, education and early childhood development, health initiatives and commercial enhancements to the North.

As of April 2014, 58,122 damaged houses were reconstructed and 24,402 partly damaged houses have been renovated with the assistance of the government, UN agencies, INGOs and NGOs. Also, 22,473 fully-damaged houses continue to be rebuilt today, with another 237 houses under renovations. An additional 50,000 houses are being built in war-ravaged areas with the help of the Indian government.

Voluntary return of Sri Lankan refugees has been encouraged via cash packages, as well as education through booklets and videos on available assistance to returning refugees. Also, nearly 6,400 plots of land have been set aside to facilitate resettlement for the displaced Muslim communities.

2. Rebuilding democracy in the North - For 40 years, Sri Lanka's Northern region, where most of the fighting took place, did not hold a single election. Since 2009 however, the government has held two elections in the region, allowing a local, stable governing body led by the Tamil National Alliance. There was also no census or statistics done in the region for 45 years. The government started that process.
3. Humanely handling prisoners – All persons arrested following the war were duly processed before a magistrate in a timely manner; they had their arrests communicated with relatives and their families were allowed visitation rights. For those arrested under the Prevention of Terrorism Act, a database of detainees is available at Terrorism Investigation Units across the country. Changes to detention of Prevention of Terrorism Act detainees were promptly communicated to human rights agencies and to the next of kin.
4. Reintegrating Tamil combatants - Within just one year, all 594 child soldiers forced to fight on behalf of the Tamil Tigers were rehabilitated and reunited with their families. In total, 11,872 children and adults have been reintroduced into society, with only 171 remaining under legal proceedings.
5. Massive economic development – Like the U.S. Marshall Plan following World War II, Sri Lanka recognized it was the war-torn areas that needed the most help. Railway lines, water treatment facilities, schools, hospitals – anything to improve growth to those that need it most – are being built in the North. The war-torn region is witnessing a remarkable 23.8 percent growth, whereas the country has witnessed an average seven percent GDP growth rate in the last five years.

6. Settling Land Issues – Mediation Boards in the areas where armed conflicts prevailed are actively addressing land disputes. The country is now undergoing the complicated process of identifying ownership and rights in collaboration with the community and trying to overcome the challenge of registries burned down by the Tamil Tigers. An education program in both simple Tamil and Sinhala languages is underway to help displaced persons come forward to benefit from the Land Policy and the Associated Programme. The program seeks to make available land to all returning IDPs as expeditiously as possible.
7. Police issues - Community policing is conducted through 422 units set up in every main police station throughout the country. More than 3,600 police officers have been trained under an ongoing project initiated by the Scottish Police College. Sixteen new police stations have been set up, and 1,450 Tamil speaking police officers serve the public in these areas. Complaints by the public against police officers regarding misconduct or similar deeds are rigorously monitored. Human Rights Education training is routinely provided to police officers.
8. Accountability and reconciliation – In May 2010, a year after the final phase of the war, the government created an independent Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission (LLRC) to study the cause of the conflict and action required to achieve post war reconciliation. After an 18-month inquiry, the LLRC made 185 recommendations, which were submitted to the parliament in 2011. The reconciliation and accountability process is currently underway.

The government has also set up an independent commission to look into the cases of alleged disappearances in the Northern and Eastern Provinces over a 26 year period between 1983 and 2009. The commission has gone village by village and received more than 20,000 submissions of disappearances in all three categories: by LTTE, by military and unknown. This process is currently ongoing.

“In ending terrorism in 2009, we asserted the greatest human right, the right to life.”

President Mahinda Rajapaska

The UK-based newspaper The Independent in 2012 called Sri Lanka the best place for a woman to be head of state

Summary of Implementation of LLRC Recommendations Select Highlights

Human Rights

- Of the complaints of disappearances received to date, 2,544 have been investigated and 380 additional cases are being reviewed by the Terrorist Investigation Division.
- In August 2013, a Presidential Commission of Inquiry was created to investigate alleged disappearances. To date, 18,590 complaints have been received, including approximately 5,000 relatives of missing security forces personnel.
- Families of arrested relatives are allowed to visit them in places of detention and all arrested persons are duly processed before a magistrate in a timely manner.
- Those who are arrested fall under the Prevention of Terrorism Act and a magistrate visits detention centers each month. Any change of place of detention is promptly communicated to next of kin and Human Rights Agencies.
- A database of detainees is available for access by next of kin at the Terrorist Investigation Units in Colombo, Vavuniya and Boosa.
- District Secretaries are taking action to ensure that religious and community leaders are assured freedom to organize and hold peaceful meetings.

Rehabilitation

- A total of 11,872 individuals have been rehabilitated and reintegrated into society (9,598 men; 2,274 women). Only 171 remain under legal proceedings.
- All 594 child combatants were rehabilitated and reunited with families within a one year period.
- Rehabilitation centers are providing artificial limbs and monthly allowances for those who are disabled. Other services include counseling programs and health clinics.
- The rehabilitation process includes professional training courses in areas including mechanical skills, IT, agriculture, food processing, carpentry and construction.

Resettling Refugees & Land Policy

- Voluntary return of Sri Lankan refugees has been encouraged via cash packages, as well as education through booklets and videos on available assistance to returning refugees.
- Nearly 6,400 plots of land have been set aside to facilitate resettlement for Muslim IDPs.
- An education program in simple Tamil and Sinhala language is underway to help displaced persons come forward to benefit from the Land Policy and the Associated Programme. The program seeks to make available land to all returning IDPs as expeditiously as possible.

Programs for Women and Children

- Widowed women have been provided with vocational and other trainings on livelihood programs.
- The National Counseling Center is offering mental health counseling to children who suffer from trauma to improve and promote social reintegration and reduce school drop-out rates.

Infrastructure/Land Return/Resettlement

- Water and sanitation facilities were upgraded in 6,000 primary schools to bring up to UNICEF/CFS standards.
- By April 2014, 58,122 damaged houses were reconstructed and 24,402 partly damaged houses have been renovated with the assistance of the government, UN agencies, INGOs and NGOs. Currently 22,473 fully damaged houses are being reconstructed and 237 houses are being renovated.
- Mediation Boards in areas where armed conflicts prevailed are actively addressing land disputes. This is a complicated issue, as registries were burned down by the Tamil Tigers. We are now in the process of identifying ownership and perception rights in collaboration with the society.
- Government Mobile Services have issued Elder's Identity Cards to more than 13,000 senior citizens in the North and East so they may enjoy priority treatment at public and private institutions and be entitled to financial benefits.
- Nearly 4,000 families in the North and East with a disabled family member, receive monthly cash allowance. Nearly 32,000 disabled persons in two provinces were provided with assistive devices including chairs, crutches and spectacles.
- Twenty-seven Sports Training and Coaching Camps had been established in districts of Northern and Eastern Provinces during the first quarter of 2014.
- 50,000 houses are being built in the war-ravaged areas with the help of the Indian government; 28,000 have been completed with the balance set to be finished by 2016.

Family Assistance

- The National Counseling Center provides preventive and treatment counseling to single parents in the Northern Province to improve mental health and promote social integration, reduce school drop-out rates and reduce domestic violence and crime.
- Social Care Centers operate in the North and East to provide integrated social care as a safety net to the vulnerable. The Ministry of Social Services, in collaboration with UNICEF provides financial support and other assistance too families in the North and East.

Police

- Community policing is conducted through 422 units set up in every main police station throughout the country. More than 3,600 police officers have been trained under an ongoing project initiated by the Scottish Police College. Sixteen new police stations have been set up, and 1,450 Tamil speaking police officers serve the public in these areas.
- Complaints by the public against police officers regarding misconduct or similar deeds are rigorously monitored. Human Rights Education training is routinely provided to police officers.

ATROCITIES CARRIED OUT BY THE TAMIL TIGERS

This material is distributed by Burson-Marsteller on behalf of the Embassy of Sri Lanka. Additional information is available at The Department of Justice, Washington, DC.

A summary of brutal assassinations by the Tamil Tigers (Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam or LTTE) include:

Political Figures	Assassinated

19-Jun-90	Mr. K. Pathmanabha	Leader, Eelam People's Revolutionary Liberation Front
29-Jul-99	Dr. Neelan Tiruchelvam	MP, Tamil United Liberation Front
14-Aug-05	Mr. Lakshman Kadirgamar	Foreign Minister

2. The Tamil Tigers carried out attacks on civilian targets throughout Sri Lanka using human bombs, vehicle bombs, time bombs, claymore mines, different Improvised Explosive Devices (IEDs) and other armed attacks. The attacks on innocent civilians using these methods killed more than 9,800 and grievously injured more than 10,000 in Government-controlled areas. The exact number of civilians killed and injured by the Tamil Tigers in areas under its dominance is unknown. Some of the deadliest bomb attacks include:

- The central bus station attack in Colombo in 1987 that killed more than 100 people
- The truck bomb attack at the Central Bank in 1996 that killed 86 and wounded more than 1,300
- The massacre of 120 Buddhist devotees at the sacred Sri Maha Bodhiya site in Anuradhapura in 1985
- The massacre of 37 civilians including 33 Buddhist monks aboard a bus at Aranthalawa in 1987
- The massacre of 147 Muslim devotees at the Kathankudy Mosque in Batticaloa in 1995

Other large scale attacks on civilians include:

Date	Location	Killed	Injured	Description
17-Apr-87	Habarana	96	44	Attack on passenger bus
6-Oct-87	Valachchenai	40	–	Setting fire to a mail train

24-Jul-01	The International Airport	6	16	Attack on the airport
26-May-08	Office Train, Dehiwala	9	80	Time bomb

5. The Tamil Tigers also engaged in a brutal campaign of assassinations. The victims of this campaign include two world leaders:

- A female suicide bomber killed former Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi in 1991
- Sri Lankan President Ranasingha Premadasa was killed in a suicide bombing in 1993
- In 1999, Sri Lankan President Chandrika Kumaratunga narrowly escaped a suicide bomb attack
- The Tamil Tigers also assassinated Sri Lanka's Defense Minister Ranjan Wijeratna in 1991
- During the last ceasefire period, they killed Foreign Minister Lakshman Kadirgamar
- Targeted and killed 364 policemen in the East of Sri Lanka in 1990

Apart from the foregoing, other notable victims of the LTTE's assassination campaign include:

Date	Target	Position

Dear Mr. Feyer:

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Your August 22 editorial, "Sri Lanka's Intransigence" makes insensitive assertions about my country, which has enjoyed uninterrupted democracy since 1931. September 2013 witnessed the first ever election to the Northern Provincial Council – delayed by over two decades as a result of the Tamil Tigers' refusal to politically empower people in the North. Today the Tamil National Alliance is in control of Provincial administration. To compare Sri Lanka with human rights and humanitarian emergencies elsewhere in the world is unconscionable.

We reject the investigation led by the UN Human Rights High Commissioner because its intrusive nature exceeds its mandate; it challenges the sovereignty of our country, violates basic principles of international law, vitiates the atmosphere needed for reconciliation, and ignores substantial and progressive socio-economic and political progress already achieved, including the resettlement of 300,000 displaced people and rehabilitation of 11,000 terrorists.

The three-decade long conflict with many failed attempts at peace due to LTTE intransigence affected the whole country. Local accountability mechanisms, now strengthened with international experts – former UN war crimes prosecutor Sir Desmond de Silva, former Yugoslavia criminal tribunal official Sir Geoffrey Nice, former Sierra Leone special court chief prosecutor Prof. David M. Crane – are respectful of inherent social, cultural and ethnic susceptibilities, unlike the UN-driven process that serves externally motivated interests and will destabilize the intricate balance of the national reconciliation process.

Sincerely,

Prasad Kariyawasam
Ambassador for Sri Lanka to the US

Rebuilding SRI LANKA

The rise of a nation after a 25-year battle against terrorism

In the past five years since the eradication of terrorism, Sri Lanka has witnessed tremendous growth and stability in economic, political and social fronts, as well as in the area of resettlement and rehabilitation of the displaced and the marginalized communities in the northern belt that was once controlled by the Tamil Tigers. The government focused its energies behind basic humanitarian needs of the affected people and has spent more than $4 billion in infrastructure, investment, jobs, education and early childhood development, health initiatives, transportation and energy infrastructure, and commercial enhancements in the northern region.

Completed infrastructure project -
Galle Port Development

Notable Projects

Sri Lanka launched a massive nationwide impetus to increase its economic growth. Notable projects initiated over the last five years include:

- Completed infrastructure projects in recent years, including the Magama Ruhunupura Mahinda Rajapaksa Port, Norochcholai thermal power plant, Upper Kotmale hydro power plant, the Colombo-Katunayake expressway the Southern expressway, and expansion of Colombo harbor.
- Resumed train travel, after 23 years, between Omanthai Railway Station and Kilinochchi Railway Station in the North by reconstructing 63 kilometers of track and improving opportunities in the region.

Resumed train travel between Omanthai Station and Kilinochchi Station after 23 years

Jaffna and Kilinochchi Water Supply and Sanitation Project

Iranamadu Runway - Reconstructed

- Launched Jaffna and Kilinochchi Water Supply and Sanitation project aimed to provide fresh drinkable water in the North.
- Created the Northern Road Connectivity Project, which rehabilitated 170 kilometers of roads in the North and the East, improving the transportation system of the island while and providing economic growth and stability in the formerly war-torn North.
- Reconstructed the Iranamadu Runway in the North, which had been destroyed by the Tamils at the end of the war. The domestic runway promoted domestic aviation and provides access to the North, boosting tourism.
- Invested in banking and credit facilities in rural areas and provided substantial fertilizer subsidies.
- Opened nearly 700 Information Technology (IT) centers in rural or semi-rural areas.
- Expanded of agriculture and fisheries throughout the country.
- Promoted tourism in the North for both foreigner and domestic markets.

Macroeconomic Progress

- Sri Lanka's growth outperformed all its South Asian neighbors at 7.3 percent GDP growth in 2013.
- The World Bank's 2014 Doing Business Report ranks Sri Lanka as the top South Asian nation for business.
- Inflation has fallen to 3.2 percent from 6.7 percent; and Debt-to-GDP has steadily fallen since 2009, from 86.2 percent to 78.3 percent in 2013 and projected 65 percent by 2016.
- Fitch Ratings and Standard & Poor's have maintained their credit ratings, BB- and B+ respectively, citing strong growth prospects. Fitch was encouraged by Sri Lanka's growing national economy and strong payment record, while S&P cited its progress in addressing a number of structural weaknesses and in keeping inflation low.
- Received foreign direct investment of $1.5 billion in 2013, up from $1.3 billion in 2012 as investor confidence has been boosted by infrastructure development and tax incentives.
- Prudent economic management during global financial crisis led the International Monetary Fund to elevate Sri Lanka to Middle Income Country status in 2010.
- Economic projections call for Sri Lanka to have a per capita income of $4,000 by 2016, a 67 percent increase from the current $3,280, highlighting a strong middle-income economy.

Tourism

The tourism sector has rebounded too. While Sri Lanka welcomed only 500,000 tourists in 2009, 1.27 million foreigners visited the country in 2013 and this figure is expected to increase to 2.5 million arrivals in 2016. Foreign companies are expecting growth opportunities in tourism, with Starwood Hotels & Resorts slated to open a 306-room hotel in 2015. Five Chinese cities have direct flights to Sri Lanka to accommodate the expected 120,000 Chinese tourists this year.

sri lanka

Tourism Milestones

- The New York Times in 2010 named Sri Lanka as a top tourist destination.
- National Geographic named Sri Lanka the top travel destination for 2012, citing beaches, wildlife, heritage and historical sites.
- Lonely Planet and British Airways named Sri Lanka as the top tourism destination in 2013.

Political and Social Progress in the North

The government initiated "Uthuru Vasanthaya," the Northern Spring, aimed at expediting development in the North by making the Northern Economy partners in the country's progress. Due to the government's efforts, economic growth in the northern region now stands at 23.8 percent. The government also made an important commitment and has since resettled most of the nearly 300,000 internally displaced Tamil civilians in the North under an economic growth and stability partnership.

For 40 years, the Tamil Tigers prevented holding any elections in the northern region. After the war, the government undertook measures to restore the right of franchise to the people and successfully held two elections — local and provincial. The Northern Province now has stable governing bodies led by the Tamil National Alliance.

In 2010, the government created an independent Lessons Learnt and Reconciliation Commission (LLRC) to investigate what led to the failure of the ceasefire agreements, ascertain facts and circumstances around the war and determine a process to seek reconciliation among communities. After an 18-month inquiry, the LLRC submitted its report to the parliament in 2011. The President also appointed special task force to work out the Committee's recommendations, many of which are being implemented. The work plan has already been made public to ensure transparency.

SRI LANKA

Government Efforts

For A Negotiated Settlement

1. Successive Sri Lankan governments have attempted to engage the Tamil Tigers in negotiations to achieve a peaceful solution to the conflict. Despite its rhetoric to the outside world that it claimed to care deeply about ordinary citizens, the Tamil Tigers never seriously addressed the issues confronting the ordinary Tamil. Nevertheless, the Government of Sri Lanka put forward proposals and took action to address many of these concerns. The Tamil Tigers only took positions and actions during the peace talks that advanced its own agenda: its quest for absolute and unequivocal power over all Tamils in the country, achieving status of being the sole representative for the Tamil people, and domination of the North and East of the country.

The history of efforts to talk peace and the reasons for successive failures demonstrates that for the Tamil Tigers, a negotiated peaceful solution was never a viable option:

2. On 01 October 1987, during a cease-fire, the Tamil Tigers launched a pogrom against Sinhalese civilians in the East, killing 211 civilians within two weeks and wounding 39. These attacks were as follows:

Date	Location	Killed	Injured	Description
6-Oct-87	Batticaloa Town	18	6	Armed attack on civilians
6-Oct-87	Valachchenai	40	0	Setting fire to mail train
6-Oct-87	Talawai, Batticaloa	25	0	Armed attack on village
6-Oct-87	Sagarapura, Trincomalee	27	6	Armed attack on village
7-Oct-87	Lahugala, Pottuvil	30	0	Attack on a bus
10-Oct-87	Gantalawa, Kantalai	9	3	Armed attack on village
15-Oct-87	Ellakantalai, Trincomalee	14	0	Armed attack on village
16-Oct-87	Pulmoddai – Anuradapura	8	0	Attack on a bus
19-Oct-87	Kalkudah	40	24	Landmine explosion

3. During this period, the Tamil Tigers' open hostility and their refusal to surrender arms led to the Indian Peace Keeping Force (IPKF) becoming an active participant in the conflict. The IPKF directly fought the Tamil Tigers for the following two years, during which the Tamil Tigers killed 1,138 Indian soldiers and wounded 2,762 according to IPKF records. The sustained violations of the Ceasefire Agreement by the Tamil Tigers had made it abundantly clear that they used the ceasefire only as cover for achieving its military objectives.

4. Despite the Tamil Tigers' many attempts to provoke a military response from the Government of Sri Lanka, the government did not respond until military intervention became the last resort, preventing a series of burgeoning humanitarian crises caused by the Tamil Tigers, beginning with the closure of the Mavil Aru sluice gates in July 2006, and such incursions in Trincomalee South in the East, in Muhamalai and Kayts in the Jaffna peninsula. The Government of Sri Lanka, forced to react to the brazen provocations of the Tamil Tigers, was impelled to counter this unceasing threat by launching a proactive Humanitarian Operation on 24 August 2006.

Statement from Russian Ministry of Sport

May 20, 2016

The Russian Ministry of Sport fully supports the IOC's actions to protect clean athletes. We agree with the decision that athletes who are doping, no matter what country they represent, should be punished and not be permitted to compete at competitions.

However, we strongly believe that clean athletes, who have spent years of their lives training, should not be deprived of the right to participate. We are willing to extend all cooperation to WADA in their investigation and have officially informed WADA of this.

We have acknowledged we've had doping problems and that changes are needed. We have taken concrete steps to prove our commitment to clean and fair sport and have agreed with WADA to a planning "road map" to reform the anti-doping process:

- All samples are collected by foreign companies and planning of those tests are carried out by UKAD, Britain's anti-doping agency. All samples are analyzed in labs accredited by WADA.
- Two full-time international WADA experts are now working in RUSADA and we have invited WADA to recommend a foreign expert to head the Russian laboratory. WADA has already suggested two candidates.
- Russia is financing an additional testing program for the Russian track and field athletes who may be competing in Rio. Each such athlete will now be tested a minimum of three times by the IAAF, in addition to all the anti-doping tests they may have in the normal course of their preparation.

We recognize that we have to regain international community's trust for what we believe is a global issue and are working hard toward that.

ENNAHDHA'S EVOLUTION TO MEET TUNISIA'S NEEDS Creating a More Prosperous and Inclusive Tunisia

At its tenth national Party Congress, Ennahdha, Tunisia's party of Muslim democrats, announced a major evolution which will help establish a more prosperous and inclusive Tunisia. Ennahdha's members voted to focus on political and policy activities which deliver the tangible outcomes of democracy, rather than a combination of political, social and religious initiatives. The separation of politics and religion will see Ennahdha become a civil party, much like Germany's Christian Democratic Party, and will allow Ennahdha to concentrate on the next phase of the country's democratic transition since the 2011 revolution, strengthening the economy.

Separating Politics from Religion

- Ennahdha will be a national democratic party devoted to reform and development. This evolution formalises a long-term trend within the party to prioritise policies and initiatives which reflect Tunisians' needs.
- Ennahdha will still draw its values from Islam, which is fully compatible with democracy and human rights, and Tunisia's 2014 Constitution.
- With the decision, Ennahdha will no longer ascribe to 'political Islam', as freedom of religion is now protected by Tunisia's Constitution. Therefore the struggle against repression on the basis of religious beliefs is no longer a factor in Tunisia.
- To carry out this historic change, party leaders can no longer simultaneously hold leadership positions in civil society organizations, including religious associations. They are also now prohibited from preaching in mosques, even informally or occasionally.

Defining and Confirming Ennahdha's New Direction

- Ennahdha's policy activities now focus on delivering the tangible results of democracy: improved security from terrorism, job creation, economic growth, improved healthcare and infrastructure, and reforms to stop corruption and inefficient bureaucracy.
- Ennahdha engaged in an intensive grassroots consultation process with its members to determine the path forward, bringing together thousands of members at local and regional party conferences in Tunisia and around the world.
- Party Congress delegates were united in their approval of Ennahdha's new direction, with 80.8 percent supporting the new relationship between political and social work.
- During the Party Congress, Ennahdha members approved motions to address the various challenges facing Tunisia related to the economy, security and the need for reform.
- Support was overwhelming: 93.5 percent approved Ennahdha's political priorities; 89.3 percent approved its economic priorities; and 87.5 percent approved its security priorities.
- Ennahdha also opened itself up to broader membership by relaxing joining conditions and procedures and facilitating professionals' and youth access to the party's decision-making committees.

Reaffirming Ennahdha's Leadership

- Ennahdha re-elected Cheikh Rached Ghannouchi as President, with support from approximately 75 percent of party delegates.
- In remarks at the Party Congress, Cheikh Rached Ghannouchi, the founder and President of Ennahdha, stated, "the success of this conference is primarily about presenting a renewed, united Ennahdha that is able to participate in solving Tunisia's problems, a party of national ambition, a party of objective analysis and constructive criticism that give rise to a democratic alternative, a party that is open to its environment and to all capabilities and potential, a party that is proud of its members - men and women."

Ennahdha Updates

Ennahdha Statement on Gasserine Protests

Following the social protests that began in Gasserine following the death of Ridha Yahyaoui, may God have mercy on him, who died protesting against deprivation from work, and following the continuation and expansion of protests and escalation of tensions, Ennahdha Party:

- Prays for the soul of the young Ridha Yahyaoui and presents its sincere condolences to his family.
- Appreciates the legitimate demands for employment and combating poverty and marginalisation which are at the core of the demands of the Revolution of Freedom and Dignity, and calls for preserving the peaceful nature of protests and avoiding all forms of violence and attacks on public and private property.
- Calls for calm, particularly after the success of social negotiations in the private sector, and calls on the government to accelerate the execution of approved plans and projects and to focus efforts on employment and balanced development, and calls on it to launch urgent programmes to that end.
- Warns against the danger of instrumentalizing the legitimate demands of deprived groups and regions and exploiting them to serve partisan agendas.

Ennahdha Statement on Recent Developments in Saudi-Iranian Relations

Following recent developments in Saudi-Iranian relations and the escalation which led to the severing of diplomatic relations between the two countries, Ennahdha Party:

- Strongly condemns the attack on Saudi diplomatic missions and calls for respecting international accords, which require the protection of diplomatic and consular missions.
- Stresses the need to remain committed to the principle of non-interference in internal affairs in order to maintain good relations between neighbouring states.

Mr Ghannouchi's Speech at the Nidaa Tounes Party Conference

On January 9, Mr. Ghannouchi spoke at the Nidaa Tounes Party Conference to stress Ennahdha's full support for President Essebsi's consensus politics. Mr. Ghannouchi stressed that there is no room for exclusion in a democratic Tunisia, and that, "Tunisia is a ship which must carry all Tunisian men and women." He commended the principles of consensus and respect for pluralism, that "came to open a new path in Tunisia, a path that led us to adopting the Constitution, holding elections, and the establishment of new constitutional bodies."

Chairman Royce Applauds Tunisia's Continued Democratic Transition

House Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Ed Royce (R-CA) released the following statement marking the five year anniversary of the popular uprising in Tunisia that ousted former President Zine el-Abedin Ben Ali, paving the way for the emergence of the region's first democratically elected government:

"The self-immolation of a Tunisian street vendor sparked protests across the region. Five years later, Tunisia has stood out as a model for peaceful democratic development – successfully completing free and fair elections for parliament and the presidency, instituting market-based economic reforms, and advancing civil liberties. Tunisia stands out in a region beset by repression, chaos and economic stagnation. Tunisia must continue on its democratic path, addressing the underlying social and economic issues that gave rise to the so-called Arab Spring but the government's resilience in the face of regional terrorism and is encouraging and should be supported."

Ennahdha Prepares for Local Conferences

In preparation of the national conference, 277 branches of the Ennahdha Party have so far held local conferences between January 3-17 to elect delegates for its regional conferences in preparation for the national conference due to be held in Spring 2016. The local parties also debated during these meetings the five papers forming the roadmap of the tenth National Conference (Evaluation, Strategy, Reference and Value Framework, Political Program, Internal Structure).

Video: Fifth Anniversary Interview with Dr. Rafik Abdessalem

Dr. Rafik Abdessalem, former Tunisian Minister for Foreign Affairs, discussed the achievements that have occurred in Tunisia in the last five years. This included the drafting of a new and progressive constitution, democratic elections and the establishment of new democratic institutions. He also pointed to some of the challenges that will face the country over the coming years, whilst commending the government's efforts to meet these challenges.

Middle East Monitor: Ennahdha: Democratic Conservatives, Not Islamists

An article in Middle East Monitor by Tallha Abdulrazaq reflected on the authors' time with Ennahdha officials and activists. It said, "Ennahdha's politics since the overthrow of the ancient regime has certainly reflected its democratic credentials. The party has willingly shared government, and even stepped away from it, and all in the name of pragmatic power sharing and gradual change."

The Economist: Five Years after a Wave of Uprisings, the Arab World is Worse off than Ever. But its People Understand their Predicament Better

The Economist published a feature article looking at the success and failings of the Arab Spring. Although the article is very critical of the political, economic and humanitarian situation in the wider region, Tunisia is clearly positioned as the success story of the Arab Spring: "On January 14th those protesters forced Zein al Abidine Ben Ali, Tunisia's dictator for the previous quarter-century, from office. What followed was not easy. Terrorism hindered both economic progress and deeper political reform. But in 2015 the country became the first Arab state ever to be judged fully 'free' by Freedom House, an American monitor of civil liberties, and it moved up a record 32 places among countries vetted by the Vienna-based Democracy Ranking Association. [...] Sadly, that outcome remains a stark anomaly."

Mr. Ghannouchi says Tunisia Better off Five Years after Revolution

In the first of a two-part interview, leader of Ennahdha Party Rashid Ghannouchi spoke to Anadolu Agency about where Tunisia stands five years after the revolution. Mr. Ghannouchi discussed Tunisia's success in consolidating democratic institutions: "Tunisia advanced on the path of democracy, wrote a new constitution and created constitutional institutions like the Constitutional Court, a commission for transitional justice, a justice council, electoral bodies and agencies to monitor the media, which are all independent." He also noted that Ennahdha is "a partner in power and we insist on this partnership. Talk about clashes between Nidaa and Ennahdha is not true. No rivalry took place between our sympathizers. There are disputes inside Nidaa and not between Nidaa and Ennahdha."

The Guardian: The Arab Spring: Why did Things go so Badly Wrong?

The Guardian published an opinion piece on the anniversary of the Arab Spring, which stated: "What factors made it possible for Tunisia to make a transition to a multiparty democracy? Two which have often been cited are the Tunisian army's traditional apolitical ethos and Tunisia's cultural affinity to Europe. But a third key factor, closely related to these two, was the remarkable role of the Ennahdha party. Long before 2011, this Islamist body – very different from Islamist groups in other countries – had been developing in a strongly democratic direction. Under Ben Ali's presidency, its experience of extreme repression led it to act in concert with other political parties. After the revolution it recognised explicitly the absolutely fundamental precondition of democracy – that parties must be willing to lose an election. In 2014 Ennahdha was as good as its word, losing an election and immediately conceding."

Ahmed Mechergui

Ahmed Mechergui is a Tunisian politician, a member of the Assembly of the People's Representatives and a member of Ennahdha External Relations committee. Born on August 4, 1969, he completed primary and high school in Jendouba and passed his Baccalaureate in 1991. He then studied Philosophy at the Faculty of Human Sciences of Raggueda (Kairouan), where he received his degree in 1995.

He then began teaching philosophy in Tunisian private secondary establishments. In 2003 he left Tunisia for France, where he stayed until the Revolution of Freedom and Dignity and the ousting of former dictator Ben Ali. He obtained a Masters in 2005 and a PhD in Philosophy. He has published a number of works, including his book "The Reality of Globalization" published in 2003 and many articles in national and international outlets.

In 2011 he was elected as a member of the National Constituent Assembly in the constituency of Jendouba, for which he was head of the Ennahdha list. During his mandate, he was Vice-President of the Commission of Services Sectors and a member of the Committee of the Preamble, the Fundamental Principles and Revision of the Constitution.

In 2014, his constituency gave him its trust again, electing him a member of the Assembly of the People's Representatives. He is currently a member of the Committee for Organisation of the Administration and Affairs of the Army Forces. He also represents the Tunisian Parliament in the Arab Parliament.

A word from Rached Ghannouchi, President, Ennahdha Party

Rached
Ghannouchi

Rached Ghannouchi on progress in Tunisia:

Five years after the revolution, Tunisians are now more politically free than ever before. However, our country faces considerable economic and security challenges with domestic and international extremist networks seeking to derail our democratic progress.

2016 is a hugely important year for Tunisia. The Tunisian Government is undertaking a number of significant reforms to address the challenges facing the country. As part of the Unity Government, Ennahdha are proud to be contributing to these critical reforms. Last month, the government made progress on its restructuring of the financial sector and injected $440 million into state-owned banks ("Société Tunisienne de Banque" and "Banque de l'Habitat").

The government is also working on a new banking law to make our central bank independent, developing reforms to support entrepreneurs and promote private sector growth. Most importantly, our ambitious five-year development plan 2016-2020 outlines a number of reforms and projects targeted at achieving a 5% growth in the next five years, and working closely with international partners to obtain the necessary technical assistance.

If these reforms can provide Tunisia with the required economic growth, Tunisia can be a powerful antidote to extremism across the region, as a model for how a moderate, inclusive society can thrive in the Arab world. Moderate Muslim democratic parties are essential to help build stability and prosperity across the Middle East and North Africa. Tunisia's model of political inclusion based on coexistence between moderates of all tendencies, whether religious or secularist, provides a desperately needed alternative to the extremism of ISIS, Al Qaeda and other groups.

2016 will be a huge test for Tunisia and the region as a whole. To achieve our five-year objectives, we must continue significant social and economic reforms in our country. The support of the international community is critical to help sustain our democratic progress, grow the economy and promote peaceful development in order to provide a successful counter-narrative to extremism. We look forward to 2016 as the year for reforms that will drive Tunisia closer to achieving the core demands of the Revolution of Freedom and Dignity and meet the aspirations of its people.

Statement by Governing Coalition Parties' Coordination Committee

On January 23, 2016, the Governing Coalition Parties' Coordination Committee held an extraordinary meeting at the headquarters of Nidaa Tounes Party to discuss recent events in the country, namely the peaceful protests based on noble and legitimate demands that were exploited by criminal groups to target state institutions and public and private properties, and politically instrumentalized by some for known ends. At this sensitive time, the governing coalition parties would like to express their:

1. Emphasis on the legitimate nature of the demands of deprived regions and broad sections of youth for work, dignified life and an end to injustice and discrimination.
2. Commitment and pledge to work with the government and the Assembly of the People's Representatives to eradicate corruption, lift administrative restrictions and revise the laws that obstruct internal and external investment which have the potential to create jobs, incorporate youth and give them hope.
3. Support and solidarity with the government and its call on it to consider the necessary amendments and reprioritization through adopting urgent measures with direct effect on job creation, accelerating the pace of reforms and implementing major projects in the deprived regions.
4. Prayers for the souls of the martyrs, officer Sofien Bousellimi and youth Ridha Yahyaoui, and their condemnation of acts of vandalism, looting and attempts at taking over legitimate protests and exploiting them to threaten state institutions, social peace and the gains of the democratic transition.
5. Appreciation of the discipline and professionalism of the security and military institutions and of their patriotism in dealing with recent events by applying the law and protecting liberties.

The Coordination Committee also discussed the mechanisms for activating its role in this phase so as to assume its full responsibility before the people and the country, and recommended the immediate holding of its experts' committee in order to support the government to adopt a set of suitable urgent measures.

The Coordination Committee called on the President of the Republic and the Prime Minister to organize a National Conference on Employment as soon as possible, without excluding anyone, as an embodiment of the principle of consensus-building, with the aim of overcoming contingent and structural difficulties and finding suitable solutions that are acceptable to all to consolidate social peace and national unity. The Coordination Committee's meeting remains in session in order to communicate with various state institutions.

Rached Ghannouchi in The Atlantic: Fight ISIS With Democracy

The Atlantic published an opinion piece by Mr. Ghannouchi in which he outlines five ways that terrorist groups such as ISIS need to be countered. It is clear that a short-term reductionist approach focused largely on military force is ineffective. Instead, Mr. Ghannouchi argues that a globalized response is necessary — one that targets ISIS locally, whilst offering the region a model that will provide economic security, human dignity, freedom of religion and social and political inclusion. He also emphasized that support from the international community in this process is essential.

Rached Ghannouchi in TIME Magazine: Tunisia Holds the Key to Defeating ISIS

TIME Magazine published an opinion piece by Mr. Ghannouchi, co-founder and president of the Ennahdha Party, on the importance of political dialogue, acceptance of inclusion, freedom, human dignity and equality to guide the democratic transition of Tunisia and its neighboring countries. Only through respect for pluralism and agreement on guarantees for the rights of all can the specters of sectarianism, extremism and political monopolization be addressed. Political inclusion, as demonstrated in Tunisia today, holds the key to the future of this region, wrote Ghannouchi.

Boutheina Ben Yaghlane in Huffington Post: Tunisia Targeting 5 Percent Growth by 2020

In an opinion piece in Huffington Post, former State Secretary for Finance Boutheina Ben Yaghlane elaborates on several critical plans and draft laws the government has been focusing on to boost investment, create jobs, narrow the budget deficit and improve the regulatory environment. Having set a growth target of 2.5 percent in 2016 and following its successful democratic transition, Tunisia's coalition government has been working hard to reform its economy.

Bloomberg Business Interview with Zied Ladhari: Angry Tunisians are Short of Money and Jobs

In an interview with Bloomberg, Ennahdha's Minister of Employment and Vocational Training Zied Ladhari stated that after the revolution, Tunisia has made remarkable progress in terms of the political process, but that on the economic and social front the country is still facing major challenges as well as high expectations from its people. Therefore, the Tunisian government is currently planning and preparing several measures to revive its economy, including holding a donor conference to stimulate economic aid, preparing a five-year economic plan it hopes to present to Parliament in March and organizing an international conference later in the year where Tunisia will seek to secure aid, loans with concessions and public and private partnerships.

Ennahdha Prepares for Local and Municipal Elections to be held on October 30, 2016

On January 23, Ennahdha Local Governance and Elections Committee and Legal Affairs Committee organized a joint workshop on the draft Local Governance Code and the draft Election Law. The discussion addressed the details of the two draft laws, including the legislative process for the election law, the need for new administrative divisions before the municipal elections (proposal of the compatibility of the delegation (المعتدية) and the municipality so as to not deprive any citizen of the right to vote), the right of members of the military and police forces to vote during the upcoming elections, the candidacy age threshold (18, 20 or 32), the question of full-time work for the Mayor and members of the Municipal bureau, the question of introducing horizontal parity conditions, and the electoral system (party-list proportional representation based on the D'Hondt system).

Reuters: Tunisia's Democracy will be Preserved "Whatever the Costs" – PM Habib Essid

In response to recent protests, Tunisia's Prime Minister Habib Essid reiterated that Tunisia's democracy would be preserved "whatever the cost." "I appeal for calm and for national unity and complete security across the country to preserve our nascent democracy which is the only example of success in the region. There has been huge political progress but we acknowledge that there are lots of economic difficulties. We will respond to young people's economic demands but we need a bit of time for that."

Women on The Front Line: Jihed: Forgiving Yesterday for a Brighter Tomorrow

During the Ben Ali regime, Jihed's father was imprisoned for his involvement with Ennahdha and for years she felt so angry that she did not want to be involved in Tunisian politics at all. However, in 2011 she decided to become an active member of the Ennahdha party and recently, she was among 20 candidates that were promoted at Tunisia's Women's Political Academy, organized by Aswat Nissa. Jihed's story is inspirational for all Tunisian women, especially those considering a career in politics.

Kalthoum
Badreddine

Born on July 2, 1963, Kalthoum Badreddine is a politician, lawyer, member of Ennahdha Party's Consultative Council and member of the House of the People's Representatives.

Badreddine was elected a member of the National Constituent Assembly in the constituency of Sfax 2 in 2011 and was elected President of the Committee of General Legislation. The voters of Sfax gave her their confidence again during the legislative elections of 2014, electing her as a member of the House of the People's Representatives. Since the beginning of the mandate, she has been a member of the Committee for Internal Regulations, Immunity, Parliamentary Laws and Electoral Laws, as well as the Committee on Administrative Reform, Good Governance and the Fight against Corruption and the Committee for the Monitoring and Management of Public Funds.

A lawyer at the Cassation Court of Sfax, she has over 24 years of legal experience. Badreddine passed her Baccalaureate in 1982, was awarded a Bachelor Degree in Law in 1986, and then received a Master of Laws degree, which allowed her to practice law. She began as a trainee lawyer in Tunis, then in Sfax. She was also a member of the Order of Lawyers of Sfax in charge of Public Relations from 2003 to 2006, then its treasurer from 2006 to 2009. As a member of the Association of the Lawyers of Sfax, she joined Ennahdha Party after the Revolution of Freedom and Dignity.

A word from Rached Ghannouchi, President and Co-Founder, Ennahdha Party

Rached
Ghannouchi

Rached Ghannouchi on progress in Tunisia:

The recent unrest in Gasserine is symptomatic of the economic problems Tunisia is facing. Five years after the fall of Ben Ali, Tunisians now live in a free and fair political system under one of the most progressive constitutions in the world. Yet their economic aspirations— more jobs and a better standard of living - are yet to be realized.

Given the interconnected nature of today's world, Tunisia cannot be immune to the wider instability enveloping the region. This instability has hit Tunisia's economy hard. The structural changes to the economy needed to address decades of bad governance and corruption take time to show results, and the feeling of disenfranchisement from marginalized sections of society is making itself heard, and needs to be addressed now.

The protests of last week serve as a reminder of the challenges we still face, and must further strengthen the government's resolve to continue with crucial reforms.

As a partner in the Coalition Government, Ennahdha Party is committed to realizing the expectations of the country's youth for jobs, growth and a decent quality of life. I am proud to point to a number of reforms that have already begun and will be progressing over the next few years, including efforts to simplify the regulatory environment, boost investment and reform labor market rules.

Alongside this, entrepreneurship programs are being introduced to provide immediate assistance to young people in launching their own start-ups in close cooperation with financial institutions. The aim is to strengthen the business ecosystem and stimulate entrepreneurial spirit among our youth. A number of other programs are working to improve employability of graduates through additional training and reconnecting unemployed youth, particularly the long-term unemployed, with mentors and enterprises.

The economic outlook for the region remains uncertain, but we have set an ambitious but achievable target of five percent growth in our economy by 2020. Given the scale of the challenges facing our country, Tunisia needs continued support from its allies, including a dramatic increase in economic assistance from the G8 countries. Over the next five years, $25 billion is needed to finance the development of infrastructure projects such as roads, bridges and other public works, particularly in previously neglected regions in order to create much-needed jobs, stimulate economic activity and maintain a stable socio-economic environment.

The support of friends and allies is critical for Tunisia, as a bridge to the Arab world, a mediator for peaceful change and an example of dialogue, consensus and peaceful reform. Our democratic journey continues.

ENNAHDHA
Renaissance Party

A word from Rached Ghannouchi, President and Co-Founder, Ennahdha Party

Rached
Ghannouchi

Rached Ghannouchi on progress in Tunisia:

Tunisia is heralded as the success story of the Arab Spring, having been the only Arab country to transition from an oppressive regime to an open, democratic society. Ennahdha, Tunisia's party of Muslim democrats, played a vital role in this progress. Now, five years after Tunisia's revolution, with much of the Middle East and North Africa sadly still trapped in turmoil, our party has reached a milestone that is one of the most important in the region in years.

After 35 years of existence of Ennahdha Party, at our Tenth Party Congress two weeks ago, Ennahdha members overwhelmingly voted to move from being a combined social, political and religious movement to a party focused on political and policy activities. As part of this decision, the party will separate itself from any religious activities and will no longer ascribe to political Islam. This separation is part of a natural progression in Ennahdha's vision, which has long been committed to a democratic, civic state in which rights and freedoms are protected, and mosques and religious institutions are neutral and non-political spaces.

Secular and Islamist parties can all learn from our experience. Tunisia now has a Constitution that protects rights and freedoms, including freedom of expression and freedom of belief and conscience. Now that we have resolved the issue of the place of religion in a democratic pluralistic society, and created a democracy governed by the rule of law, Tunisia can move beyond ideological politics and slogans. Parties can now prioritize developing and implementing plans that improve the lives of all their citizens, by developing the economy, creating jobs, countering terrorism and alleviating poverty.

For those who feel that democracy, development, faith and stability cannot coexist, Ennahdha can be a source of inspiration. We have shown that consensus building and compromise are the solutions to corruption, despotism, chaos and extremism. And for countries around the world desperate to stamp out the terrible scourge of Daesh, we have proven Muslim Democrats are reliable, forward-looking allies in the fight against terrorism. This is the beginning of a new chapter for Ennahdha and Tunisia. We hope it also inspires others across the Arab world, and shows them a pathway to overcome the struggles they face.

Tunisia's Muslim Democrats Wall Street Journal – May 25, 2016

In this editorial, the Wall Street Journal praises Ennahdha as one of "the glimmers of hope within the house of Islam," following the Party's announcement that it will separate its politics from its religious and social activities. Ennahdha will remain grounded in broadly Islamic values, but will focus on the needs of society in areas such as economic development and counterterrorism to further stabilize Tunisia's democracy, and to continue the country's success which is built on "a consensus between the secular and the pious that is all too rare in the Arab world."

Noah Feldman, professor of constitutional and international law at Harvard University, commented on Ennahdha's transformation from a social movement to a political party, which he calls a "major development for the history of democracy in the Muslim world." Feldman argues that "the latest move is a further piece of evidence that the Muslim Democrats of Ennahdha are the "real thing" and that other parties in the MENA region should take note of Ennahdha's evolution.

Newsweek's Nicholas Noe observes that as the Tunisian government moves further away from the events of 2011, it has become clear that, "Tunisia represents the start of yet another powerful dynamic that goes well beyond national borders." After working strenuously over the past couple of years "to promote a robust internal debate within both the leadership and the base," Ennahdha decided to pivot towards governing secularly, a move that reflects "trends that gravitate towards compromise and co-existence." Hope exists that this is a milestone that "will force many other Islamic movements to rethink their role and their priorities and what they need to focus on."

Tunisian Economic Reforms: Between Textiles and Terrorism Atlantic Council – May 31, 2016

Mohamed Malouche and Scott Mastic of the Atlantic Council note that Tunisia made important strides, however, “its economic struggles are threatening to undermine its political progress.” In the short run, expanding access to U.S. markets will produce tangible economic benefits in Tunisia, “but to reach its full potential Tunisian officials must also focus on win-win cooperation with the United States in the medium and long run.”

Tunisia’s Ennahdha Party Begins a New Political Chapter Voice of America – May 31, 2016

As Lisa Bryant explains, it seems that Ennahdha “appears to be starting a new chapter in its history, as it moves to separate its political and religious activities,” a move that was “overwhelmingly endorsed at a party conference” last week. Unable to turn the struggling Tunisian economy around immediately following the revolution in 2011, Tunisian leaders have expressed hope that Ennahdha will be able to “deliver on its latest promise.”

Ennahdha Move May Set a Good Regional Example The National – H.A. Hellyer – May 26, 2016

H.A. Hellyer explores the construct of identity politics in relation to the maturing of the Ennahdha Party in The National. He concludes that identity politics still continue to negatively impact the state of play through the Maghreb region. “In Tunisia, however, the Islamists of Ennahdha feel comfortable enough about their identity that they can shift to focusing on pragmatic political programs,” he writes.

Listening to Tunisian Civil Society: Economic Reforms to Unlock Credit and Innovation The World Bank – May 26, 2016

The World Bank observes that “economic transition is seen as vital for Tunisia.” Tunisians are strapped by laws that tightly control the flow of money and “only 27% of Tunisia’s population (of 11 million people in all) has access to finance.” Along with the outstanding shift towards democracy, it is critical now more than ever that a similar shift in economic policy take place, because “outdated economic policies now stand in the way of growth, and even peace in the long-term.”

How Big Were the Changes Tunisia’s Ennahdha Party Just Made at its National Congress? Washington Post – May 25, 2016

Monica Marks, writing for the Washington Post, reflects on how important Ennahdha’s reforms are in Tunisian politics. Marks notes that even the opposing party leader and current Tunisian President Beji Caid Essebi has changed his tune, describing Ennahdha as “moving in the right direction.” The reformation of Ennahdha “reflects the party’s desire to professionalize,” and the subsequent acceptance from opposition leaders has led to palpable relief for many in Tunisia.

Ennahdha in Tunisia Pioneers another Arab Era and Test Agence Global – May 28, 2016

News agency Agence Global published an analysis of the maturation of the Ennahdha Party written by Rami G. Khouri, claiming that Ennahdha’s move away from political Islam is “one of the most important developments in modern Arab political life” and that Ennahdha has proven to be “perhaps the most effective Islamist political organization in the modern Arab world.”

Interview with Rached Ghannouchi Contemporary Arab Affairs – Volume 9, Issue 2, 2016

Academic journal Contemporary Arab Affairs published an interview with Cheikh Rached Ghannouchi in which he discusses Tunisia’s democratic transition, what type of governance the country needs in order to achieve political, social, and economic stability, and the role of Ennahdha can play in Tunisian governance.

Ennahdha Party Consultative Council Statement

The Consultative Council of Ennahdha Party held its 41st session on February 13-14, 2016, during which it discussed national, regional and international developments. The Council also discussed preparation for the Party's tenth national conference. Following discussions, the Council:

- Commended the efforts made by the logistical preparation committee on their successful organization of 279 local conferences.
- Approved all the content to be presented to the Party's regional conferences before being put to the National Conference. The Council also decided to start holding regional and sectorial conferences at the end of this month.
- Stressed that overcoming the many problems facing our country, particularly in regards to Libya, requires the support of national unity between all political and social actors and rising above political wrangling regarding marginal issues and contrived disputes.
- Emphasized the country's need for consensus between political actors and social organizations to resolve the principle challenge of unemployment.
- Stressed the legitimacy of the demands of protesters and their right to peaceful protest.
- Called on the government to monitor the implementation of the urgent measures it had adopted, to implement a developmental plan.
- Commended the role of the Assembly of the People's Representatives and called on it to finalize plans for stimulating economic development in the country through the adoption of the new investment code, and create suitable economic conditions that can help reduce social tension.
- Called on the private sector to assume their role in this sensitive phase, through further recruitment and launching projects particularly in inner regions and supporting the government's efforts in resolving the problem of unemployment.

In relation to the Libyan situation, the Council stressed:

- The Party's support for the official Tunisian position of opposing military intervention in Libya.
- The Party's continuation of all possible efforts towards facilitating the formation of a Libyan Government of National Unity that can start to coordinate a response to the various economic, social and security threats facing the country.

Rached Ghannouchi: Islam, Democracy and the Future of the Muslim World

The Huffington Post published a speech by Ennahdha President Rached Ghannouchi on democratic progress in the Arab world delivered on October 1, 2014 at Columbia University's Institute for Religion, Culture and Public Life. In his address, Mr. Ghannouchi set out the reasons behind Tunisia's democratic successes so far, including Ennahdha's commitment to consensus politics and its rejection of monopoly of power.

The Hill Op-Ed: Tunisia and Ukraine – Linchpins of U.S. Interests

An op-ed in The Hill by Kristin M. Lord and William B. Taylor argue that Tunisia and Ukraine offer crucial opportunities for America and its allies to advance their strategic interests and potentially transform today's dangerous security environment. It said, "A failed Tunisia would not only be a tragedy for Tunisians who led the Arab Spring and united to transform their society peacefully. It would be an unparalleled victory for ISIS and other extremist movements – already recruiting heavily in Tunisia – as well as a blow to all those within the region who wish to establish just, representative governments." Overall, the article stresses the need for a U.S. foreign policy that prioritizes Tunisia and Ukraine.

U.S. Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Travels to Africa and the Maghreb

A press release from the State Department announced that Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs Thomas Shannon will travel to Morocco, Tunisia, Algeria, Burkina Faso and Mali on February 16-25: "On February 18-19, Ambassador Shannon will travel to Tunis to affirm with government officials the growing strategic partnership between our countries, meet with civil society leaders to discuss their important role in ensuing citizen engagement in political processes and meet with staff in our Libya External Office."

Tech Crunch: Tunisia is Becoming MENA's Next Start-up Hub

Tech Crunch reported that since the 2011 Arab Revolution, the Tunisian start-up scene has blossomed due to faster and freer Internet access and technological advances. Reportedly, the most successful Tunisian start-ups focus on mobilizing communities and encouraging civic engagement with which they stimulate the Tunisian economy and provide essential support to the government. The article said Tunisian start-ups are finding ways to improve their society and fix endemic economic problems through innovation and creativity. It concludes that moving into 2016, Tunisia will be an important country to watch in the MENA's start-up scene.

Carnegie: Tunisia cited as best Arab country in terms of governance

Carnegie Endowment of International Peace's Middle East Program conducted the first survey of Arab experts that represents the detailed views of 105 experts from almost every Arab country on the array of challenges facing the Middle East. Three themes in particular stand out from the survey: government legitimacy, prioritization of local concerns and democratic prospects. Experts were asked to name the three Arab countries that best provide governance for their peoples. Nearly two in three cite Tunisia, which for all of its continuing challenges has emerged five years after its revolution as the most politically inclusive society in the Arab world.

European Council on Foreign Relations: A New European Agenda for North Africa

A publication in the European Council on Foreign Relations edited by Anthony Dworkin argues that five years after the Arab uprisings, the EU needs to keep its ambitions to promote reform in the region. There are chapters for Tunisia, Morocco, Algeria, Egypt and Libya. Monica Marks' Tunisia chapter argues that Tunisia's international partners should make clear that security is inseparable from good governance, and focus on mapping the key bureaucratic obstacles to reform. She recommends supporting measures to reform the structures of the Tunisian state to improve its ability to meet popular aspirations and combat security threats.

Reuters: Tunisia to get $560 mln Loan from EU to Boost Economy

As part of broader efforts by the EU to help Tunisia overcome its socio-economic issues, Reuters reported that the country is to get a loan of half a billion euros ($560 million) from the European Union. The EU said the assistance came at the request of Tunisia and will take the form of medium-term loans on favorable financial terms.

Reuters: IMF to Start Talks with Tunisia Over New Loan Program – Official

In addition to the EU loan, the Ennahdha Party welcomes the news that the International Monetary Fund is planning a visit to Tunisia to begin talks on a new credit program. According to a Tunisian official, the program is likely to be worth at least $1.7 billion and will help Tunisia revive its economy.

The Economist: Democracy Index 2015 – Democracy in an Age of Anxiety

The Economist Intelligence Unit's Democracy Index provides a snapshot of the state of democracy worldwide for 165 independent states and two territories. Although the MENA region has experienced an overall decline in its score in the Index, Tunisia moved from being a "hybrid regime" to a "flawed democracy" in 2014 and has continued to build the foundations of democracy, with its October 2014 parliamentary election attracting a higher voter turnout than in past elections, ushering in a new secular Islamist coalition government in February 2015. Despite the negative momentum in much of the region, the average regional score is higher than it was prior to the onset of the Arab Spring.

Freedom House: The Map that Shows Most and Least Free Countries in the World

Last week, democracy watchdog organization Freedom House released its annual list of free countries in the world, drawing the conclusion that "global freedom is under pressure." Tunisia is the only country in the MENA region that was classified as a "free" country.

Human Rights Watch: Tunisia – Landmark Step for Detainee Rights

In a revision of the Code of Criminal Procedure on February 2, the Tunisian Parliament approved changes in detainee rights by granting suspects the right to a lawyer from the onset of detention and by shortening the maximum pre-charge detention. According to Human Rights Watch, this is a "significant breakthrough for human rights" in Tunisia.

Tunisian Ambassador Chairs UN Women Executive Board Session

On February 9, the UN Women Executive Board organized its first Regular Session at the United Nations Headquarters in New York. The Chair of the session, Ambassador Mohamed Khaled Khiari from the Permanent Mission of Tunisia, introduced the session and UN Women Executive Director Phumzile Mlambo-Ngcuka gave an opening statement. Taking a closer look at UN Women's work on the ground, the Board discussed the organization's operational response in Egypt, the joint field visit of the Executive Boards of UNDP/UNFPA/UNOPS, UNICEF, UN Women and the WFP to Jordan in 2015 and UN Women's operations in the Za'atari refugee camp in Jordan, as well as several other initiatives relating to gender equality. Ennahdha Party parliamentarians Sana Mersni, Sayida Ounissi and Imen Ben Mohamed attended the summit to work on the creation of an Arab Women MPs Network for Gender Equality.

Profile of the Week: Badreddine Abdelkafi

Badreddine Abdelkafi is a Member of the Tunisian Parliament representing the Sfax 2 constituency. He serves on the parliamentary Committee on Industry, Energy, Natural Resources, Infrastructure and the Environment as well as on the Elections Committee. Mr. Abdelkafi also has the honor of having served in the National Constituent Assembly as Assistant to the President of the Assembly charged with relations with citizens and with civil society.

Mr. Abdelkafi was born on July 7, 1959 in Sfax, and earned his university degree in physics and mathematics from the Sfax campus of the University of Sciences in 1981, after which he taught mathematics at high school level for 7 years in the city of Gabes in southern Tunisia. In April 1981, Mr. Abdelkafi represented a group of students from the Tunisian south in the National Summit meeting of the Islamic Movement, during which a new political party - the Islamic Tendency Movement - was announced. In the aftermath of that meeting, he was arrested by the police for questioning and released, and then again arrested in 1987 and held without charge in prison for 8 months. In 1991, Mr. Abdelkafi was formally charged with founding an illegal organization and sentenced to 11 years in prison, which he served, finally being released in 2002.

After the January 14, 2011 revolution, he was elected as General Secretary of the regional office of Ennahdha in the southern Sfax region, the same region that he was elected to represent in the National Constituent Assembly in Tunisia's first free and fair election on October 23 of that year.

As member of the National Constituent Assembly in charge of Relations with Civil Society, he took the initiative to form a team representing all political tendencies in the Assembly, and worked closely with all blocs to build a vision of how the Assembly should involve civil society in its work, in a very extraordinary post-revolution moment in which the foundations of a new governing system were being built. His team organized a National Dialogue around the Constitution with public meetings in all the regions of the country.

Mr. Abdelkafi said his approach of working with civil society is based on "the core value of openness to all representatives of civil society, trying to accompany them in their activities, to open doors to them, listen to them and benefit from them and to give them the possibility to participate in this foundational phase... If there is a shared belief and concern by the Assembly and civil society in the importance of the inclusion of the citizen in decision-making, we can do it."

Mr. Abdelkafi is a proud husband and father of three children, and has done incredible work in his various capacities of bringing people together towards a common goal, most notably on working closely with civil society organizations to build broad consensus on the constitution passed on 27 January 2014.

A word from Rached Ghannouchi, President and Co-Founder, Ennahdha Party

Rached
Ghannouchi

Rached Ghannouchi on progress in Tunisia:

The recent social unrest in Kasserine reinforces the fundamental challenge facing Tunisia - a well-educated, ambitious and young section of society feels unable to realize their potential. However, comparisons between the recent events in Kasserine and events in Sidi Bouzid five years ago are both inaccurate and unhelpful.

Tunisia deserves to be recognized as the shining light of the Arab Spring. Our democratic transition follows years of political and economic stagnation, and like every democratic project, it takes time to be fully realized. Given regional instability and a global financial slowdown, the fact that Tunisia has maintained stable governance while holding two free and fair elections, whilst drafting and implementing a new progressive constitution, is a remarkable achievement.

This point was eloquently made by Brian Klaas, who recently argued that a country cannot become democratic overnight - assessing Tunisia five years after the Arab Spring would be akin to assessing Japan in 1950. Although we must ensure we make more progress on the socio-economic situation in the country, we must also be realistic that Tunisia's democratic transition is a long-term project, where the occasional setback is to be expected.

However, there is much to be optimistic about, such as the recent news that Tunisia is fast becoming the region's next tech start-up hub. Since the revolution in 2011, thousands of new tech start-ups have benefited from faster, freer internet access and advances in technology, finding ways to actively improve their society and help solve economic problems through innovation and creativity.

Such innovation goes hand in hand with improved economic and political governance - in which Tunisia is also making huge progress. The recent Carnegie Endowment survey that asked regional experts to name the best Arab countries that best provide governance for their peoples showed Tunisia as the clear number one example of good governance in the region. This good governance model will be further strengthened through the many important constitutional institutions to be founded this year, including the Constitutional Court and independent constitutional commissions on human rights, good governance and anti-corruption, sustainable development, and media and communication.

Ennahdha continues to work hard to realize the aspirations of the country's youth, and the ambitious levels of economic growth forecast for the country reflect this, with 5% GDP growth predicted by 2020. With municipal elections coming later this year, and many critical reforms to come this year, the need for political consensus will be crucial in combating the social, economic and security threats facing the country. Ennahdha will continue to work alongside our coalition partners, Nidaa Tounes, UPL and Afek, for the good of the country. Step by step, Tunisia is consolidating its place as the shining light of the Arab Spring.

A Word from Rached Ghannouchi, President and Co-Founder, Ennahdha Party

Rached
Ghannouchi

Rached Ghannouchi on progress in Tunisia:

At our tenth national Party Congress in May, Ennahdha announced a major evolution to help establish a more prosperous and inclusive Tunisia. Our members voted for the separation of the political and religious fields, and to confirm Ennahdha's focus as a civil party, much like Germany's Christian Democratic Party. Since the conclusion of our congress we have started implementing many of the changes agreed to the party structure, changes that will improve the workings of the party and ensure the stability of Tunisia's political system.

Another area Ennahdha are keen to improve is the involvement of women in our political system. Indeed the Tunisian Parliament, with the support of Ennahdha MPs, recently passed a bill for gender parity in all local electoral lists, that will greatly increase female representation across the country at next year's March 2017 local elections. All parties and electoral lists must now put forward equal numbers of male and female candidates, and ensure an equal gender representation at the head of their lists. The upcoming local elections mark an important step in Tunisia's democratic consolidation. They will bring to the fore thousands of new elected representatives, chosen to address the local needs and priorities of their districts and constituents, and establish more inclusive, responsive and open governance that is closer to each citizen.

Tunisia has also been making strides in ensuring the security of tourist sites across the country. The tourism industry has suffered as a result of last year's tragic attacks, yet tourists are starting to come back. Security cooperation and training programs with many of our allies have helped improve the capabilities of our security services and establish a number of specialist security centers and new training programs. Tunisia is committed to ensure that our country and our resorts are safe, while continuing to give Tunisians the confidence to continue forward on their democratic path.

Ennahdha Statement on Terrorist Attack at Istanbul International Airport

Tunis, June 30, 2016

On Tuesday evening, 28 June 2016, a terrorist attack targeted Istanbul International Airport, causing dozens of innocent victims, both Turks and foreigners. Ennahdha Party expresses its sympathy and solidarity with Turkey and with the victims and their families. Moreover, it:

- Strongly condemns the heinous crime that targeted Istanbul Airport, the latest such attack seeking to undermine Turkey's stability and prosperity.
- Prays for the souls of the victims of the horrific terrorist crime and offers its condolences to their families, and wishes the injured a speedy recovery.
- Stresses that taking the lives of innocent people is a crime against the values and teachings of Islam and further proof that terrorist groups are criminal gangs with no relation to our faith.
- Calls for an international partnership to combat terrorism and for strengthening cooperation in order to counter it by addressing its roots and causes.

Tunis, June 13, 2016

The city of Orlando, Florida, in the United States witnessed a terrorist attack in a night club resulting in over a hundred victims killed and injured. Following this horrific crime in one of the worst mass shootings in US history, Ennahdha Party:

- Strongly condemns this terrorist attack and presents its condolences to the victims' families and to the American people.
- Stresses that the attack contravenes the values of Islam and violates its teachings and that the perpetrator does not represent Muslims.
- Calls for desisting from exploiting this terrorist attack to sow hatred and division between communities and faiths, and stresses that terrorism is a global threat that requires a global strategy to counter it.

Rached Ghannouchi Q&A: Thoughts on Democratic Islam – Middle East Eye – June 12, 2016

In an interesting interview with Middle East Eye, Cheikh Rached Ghannouchi comments on Ennahdha's move away from political Islam and the Party's separation of politics and religion. Asked if he thinks Ennahdha could become a national party at the core of political life in Tunisia, he stated, "Tunisians are homogenous, very unified, while there is real plurality in thought and culture. There is a large center ground. Ennahdha can represent this center of ordinary Tunisians within the middle and lower class."

Turkey a resilient nation despite attempted coup

It has been one year since the bloody and, thankfully, failed coup attempt by FETO in Turkey. I was with family in Ankara, the capital, for summer leave on the night of July 15. I will remember forever how I was almost speechless trying to explain to my little daughter why on Earth fighter jets were flying so frighteningly close and loud as well as the horrific sound of distant bombing of state institutions, including the Parliament.

Obviously, the trauma was much worse at the national level. They killed 250 people and wounded more than 2,000. They also wanted to assassinate President Erdoğan. In essence, they aimed at the very heart of our constitutional order. But the Turkish people stood up against this calamity and heroic averted what may have been the greatest blow to our democracy.

So, who are the members of FETO? What do they want? The followers of Fethullah Gulen, the head of FETO, believe that he is the "messiah." To advance its interests, FETO believes that violating any legal, religious or ethical codes is fully legitimate. Its members excel at concealing their connection to Gulen to avert suspicion while establishing themselves in different institutions in different countries. In other words, FETO is a new-generation terrorist organization based on hypocrisy, concealment, and secrecy. Of course, all this serves their higher purpose: They see themselves as the "golden generation" destined to take control of Turkey and, believe it or not, of the world.

Gülen's desire to reign in Turkey and start a regime according to his perverted religious ethos was no secret. For decades, he directed his followers to infiltrate all critical state organs, such as the police, judiciary, and armed forces. Even when I was at college in early '90s, their younger recruits were in our midst preparing themselves for future positions. I always thought they were too obvious. No firm handshake, no genuine eye contact but a sinister approach to the needy to take advantage of them. Unfortunately, they were all too good at steering the vulnerable little by little toward becoming a servant of their perverted religious ways and political objectives.

Yet this was never only about Turkey. We are faced with a terror organization with global aspirations. FETO is active in more than 150 countries. It conceals its true nature behind a loose network of schools, NGOs seemingly promoting interfaith dialogue, lobbyists, media outlets and companies, including in the United States. One disturbing example is the presence of more than 170 charter schools that FETO members run across the United States. These schools are supported by a whopping half-billion dollars in American taxpayers' money. It is believed that a good portion of this is funneled into darker avenues than educating American kids. Yet it is hard to believe the leader of this organization still is living in Pennsylvania in a self-imposed exile. Turkish requests of extradition have so far not been met.

However, Turkey has proven to be a resilient nation in the face of such a challenge. Stability and order were restored soon after the coup attempt. A state of emergency was declared, but it did not interfere with the daily affairs and aims at bringing the responsible to justice.

Turkey made the utmost effort not to compromise rule of law, democracy, and morality. Life continues.

We just transformed our political system into a presidential democracy in line with the results of a peaceful referendum. Turkish economy is growing at an accelerated pace recording one of the fastest growth rates in Europe supported by strong exports. Tourism is coming back in a promising way. Turkey is at the center of strategic crossroads. We have a stake in almost every remarkable international topic. Our foreign policy is much more active and assertive. Turkey is the most generous country per capita in the world accommodating more than 3 million people who fled persecution in our region, first and foremost in Syria. Turkey is a fascinating country. We always had challenges. We will always have them. Yet, we will always prevail thanks to the potential of the Turkish people.

Sunday is my last day in Miami as the Consul General of Turkey.

I had the privilege of watching over the establishment of the Turkish consulate and new connections between Miami and Turkey such as direct Turkish Airlines service between Istanbul and Miami. I have seen promising new business links. Just recently Miami and the City of Antalya, on the Turkish Riviera. Both were declared sister cities.

In three years, my family and I truly connected with Miami and its wonderful people. We will always love and remember this great town.

ÖZGÜR ALTAN HAS BEEN THE CONSUL GENERAL OF TURKEY IN MIAMI SINCE 2014.

TURKISH CONSULATE GENERAL IN NEW YORK HOSTS A ROUND TABLE DISCUSSION FOR THE COMMEMORATION OF THE JULY 15TH DEMOCRACY AND NATIONAL UNITY DAY

New York, NY – Today, the Consul General for the Turkish Consulate General in New York, Ertan Yalçın, hosted a round table discussion to commemorate the July 15th Democracy and National Unity Day. The event was held in the Turkish Consulate General Building located in the Midtown region of Manhattan.

Ertan Yalçın recognized the Turkish citizens who lost their lives protecting the unity of Turkey and highlighted the common values that all Turks share. On July 15th, 2016, Turkish democracy came under attack by a coup attempt orchestrated by the Fetullah Gülen Terrorist Organization.

"Today we remember a significant day in Turkey's history. We commemorate the day that the Turkish people protected the democracy of Turkey and recognize the lives that were lost during the attempted coup. Moving forward this will become a day to recognize the unity among the Turkish people."

The Fetullah Gülen Terrorist Organization is an anti-government terrorist group who bombed the Turkish parliament with fighter jets, aimed military tanks at civilians and attempted to assassinate President Erdogan. The attempted coup murdered 250 Turkish citizens, left more than 2000 citizens wounded and traumatized an entire nation. July 15th will forever be remembered as the day the brave citizens of Turkey poured into the streets to defend their democracy and derailed the coup attempt. July 15th is a day to commemorate those who died and were wounded in the name of democracy, it has become the anniversary of the people's victory.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President & Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

As we approach the height of the summer tourist season, it is great to see positive developments in Tunisia's tourist industry. Indeed, this crucial sector, which contributes significantly to our GDP, was hit badly following the attacks at Sousse and Tunis, but tourist numbers are steadily increasing. Following a number of crucial security reforms, recent data shows an increase of 29% in the number of tourists visiting Tunisia compared to this time last year. This is fantastic news and will bring much needed investment into areas of the country that have traditionally relied on high tourist numbers. This also means more jobs for our country's youth, a demographic whose hope and expectations must be realized following our revolution.

Tunisia is widely seen as the shining light in the MENA region, and positive examples are needed more than ever given recent events in the Gulf. Tunisia continues to have good relations with our Arab neighbors, a number of which were heavily involved in our recent investment conference held in November last year, which highlighted the enormous trade potential of our country. We will continue to support the preservation of Arab unity, good relations with all parties, and the strengthening of diplomatic tradition among Arab states. Ennahdha's stance reflects Tunisia's longstanding policy of non-alignment.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President & Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Tunisia's relationship with the U.S. has traditionally been very close. Not only was the U.S. the first country to recognize Tunisia as an independent state following independence from France in 1956, but President John Adams signed a peace treaty with Tunisia as far back as 1797, over 200 years ago.

Indeed, the support Tunisia has received from the U.S. following our revolution in 2011 has been vital in ensuring our political transition. Financial and military support helped to enable and improve our security services in light of the increased threat from extremist groups. However, groups such as Daesh continue to take advantage of the power vacuum in neighboring Libya, and the political situation there looks unlikely to be solved any time soon.

We are therefore concerned by recent developments surrounding the new U.S. budget that will reportedly reduce aid to Tunisia by 61.1% from $177m a year to $54m. Tunisia continues to experience complex economic and security challenges, and we have played an important role as a strategic partner to the U.S. in the fight against international terrorism - an issue that threatens us all.

We welcome the recent call by Senator John McCain for the U.S. to retain its economic support to Tunisia and we hope that the U.S. will continue to be our ally in our democratic and economic transition. Following the news of Senator McCain's illness, we wish him all the best and a very speedy recovery.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Tunisia has experienced an eventful summer. We saw the 60th anniversary of the proclamation of the Tunisian Republic, Ennahdha held the 14th Session of its Consultative Council, and we received the good news that the British Government has eased its travel advice on Tunisia. This is a crucial decision for Tunisia and we look forward to welcoming British visitors back into our country.

We also witnessed an important Government reshuffle in Tunisia ahead of the local elections in November. The reshuffle seeks to help solve the various economic challenges facing our country.

to drive economic change in the country. We wish him the best of luck in what is a hugely important

Minister of Employment and Vocational Training to become the Minister of Industry and SMEs, while Zied Ladhari has moved from Minister for Industry and Commerce to being the Minister of Investment

Digital Economy), Habib Debbabbi (Secretary of State for the Digital Economy), Sayida Ounissi (Secretary of State for Employment and Vocational Training) and Khalil Amiri (Secretary of State for Higher Education and Scientific Research) - all remain in their existing posts. The reshuffle allows the Government to focus on its priorities to deliver economic reform, ensuring the country provides a stable and attractive environment for domestic and foreign investment.

The Ennahdha Party has also called for priority to be given to election of new members of the Electoral support and cooperation of all parties are needed in order to ensure free and fair elections on 17th December, which represent the first step towards decentralisation of power under the new Constitution.

Covering news from Tunisia and Ennahdha

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Following the recent government reshuffle, Ennahdha has further established itself as a leader in Tunisia. It allows the election of Ennahdha representatives to various commission chairmanships including the Industry, Agriculture, Regional Development, and Security and Defense Commissions. Naoufel Eljammali was also elected Chair of the Commission for Rights and Liberties and External Relations, a body with a hugely important remit in Tunisia.

These MPs join a raft of Ennahdha representatives aiming to push forward innovative and pragmatic reforms across a wide range of areas. This includes the fight against corruption through the regulation of SMEs, and the promotion of private entrepreneurship and economic growth in the political realm we must now concentrate on fostering economic growth. An important factor in this will However, political reform and economic growth are meaningless unless it benefits everyone. That is why Ennahdha is pushing for the upcoming local elections to take place in March 2018. These elections represent a key milestone in both the development of Tunisia and the promotion of a Muslim region. Ennahdha is working hard to ensure people are registered, while working alongside NGOs to educate Tunisians on the benefits of civic engagement.

Only by decentralizing power can we popularize our modernizing agenda. Local elections will therefore provide a crucial platform upon which those traditionally marginalized can voice their opinions on how our country should be run. Although we have had 5.8m Tunisians registered to vote, we must ensure this figure continues to rise.

Covering News from Tunisia and Ennahdha

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Tunisia continues to push ahead with social, political and economic reforms to strengthen its democratic transition. Last week, we hosted an international trade and investment forum, with over 1,500 international investors, entrepreneurs and business leaders in attendance. This was an important event that promoted Tunisia as a highly competitive and attractive business destination.

The Minister of Investment and International Cooperation, Zied Ladhari, an Ennahdha Member, played an important role in the Forum and in showcasing the potential of various sectors for investment, including our manufacturing, aeronautical, pharmaceutical and agriculture industries.

Reforms to strengthen women's rights are also an important element of strengthening our economy because Tunisian women represent a valuable part of the labor force and a majority of university graduates. I was therefore pleased to see Tunisia named the most progressive country in the Middle East and North Africa in gender equality, according to the World Economic Forum's Global Gender Gap Index. We have introduced some ground-breaking legislation in recent months, specifically around prevention and protection against all forms of gender-based violence.

Tunisia continues to represent an important example to the rest of the region, not only as a model for democracy, but also as a regional leader in important sectors, including in renewable energy and information and communication technologies. This is an exciting period for our country as we look ahead to regional elections early next year.

ENNAHDHA & TUNISIA UPDATES

Ennahdha's Parliamentary Members Re-Elects Bhiri as President: On November 11, Nouredine Bhiri was re-elected as the president of Ennahdha's parliamentary bloc. Bhiri received 44 votes against Houcine Jaziri's 18 at the party's annual general assembly ahead of parliament's third session. Bhiri stated: "The parliamentary bloc of the Ennahdha Party will work to boost parliamentary action and support the legislative initiatives of the bloc and strengthen its role of control over the government and elected officials in the regions."

Parliament Finally Chooses New ISIE President: After months of delay, the Assembly of People's Representatives (ARP) selected Mohamed Tilli Mansri as the new president of the Independent High Authority for Elections (ISIE) on November 14. Mansri received 115 votes and was primarily backed by Nidaa Tounes, Ennahdha, and the Free Patriotic Union (UPL) MPs.

The Commission for Rights and Liberties and External Relations, chaired by MP Naoufel Eljammali, is considering a proposal of a draft bill for the Human Rights Commission. Mehrezia Labidi stressed that democracy is intertwined with the successful establishment of such bodies and suggested that the body should be a path for youth involvement, as she deems the entry requirement of ten years' experience unfair.

The Commission of Industry, Energy, Natural Resources, Infrastructure and Environment, chaired by Ameer Larayedh MP, held a hearing with the Minister of Communication Technologies and the Digital Economy Mr. Anouar Maarouf. The Minister gave a presentation on the most important achievements of 2017, which exceeded objectives that were set last year.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

I would like to begin by taking the opportunity to wish you all a healthy and prosperous start to the new year. Looking back at 2017, Tunisia and the Ennahdha Party have much to be proud of, including the landmark Law on Eliminating Violence Against Women as a legal protection against domestic abuse and various economic reforms that will support the growth of Tunisia's economy and spread wealth across the country. In 2018, we are confident that Tunisia will continue to be an exemplar for the region more widely.

I am delighted that the Independent High Authority for Elections Council has confirmed that the municipal elections will take place on 6 May 2018. As President of the Ennahdha Party, I have consistently supported these elections, which will act as a crucial next step for Tunisia's strengthening democracy. Tunisia's post-revolution constitution emphasizes the importance of decentralization and local democracy for a healthy political and civil society.

In a further demonstration of Tunisia's and Ennahdha's commitment to social progress, the Tunisian parliament has approved a draft Council of Europe Convention report which aims to prevent and combat the sexual exploitation and abuse of children. This report is in line with Ennahdha MP Yamina Zoghلامي's proposal to introduce sexual education in schools for pupils as young as five years old, working according to the ethos that a child who understands their body can better protect themselves from potential harm. From giving assistance to victims to implementing protective measures, safeguarding the rights of all Tunisians, including our children, has my committed support.

Separately, over the past days, several Tunisian regions have witnessed protests in response to the 2018 budget. The Ennahdha Party acknowledges the right of Tunisian citizens to protest, but strongly condemns any vandalism or violence, and therefore calls on those with legitimate demands to make their voices heard calmly, rationally, and in adherence to the rule of law. Ennahdha has been – and continues to be – at the forefront of developing and implementing the economic reforms capable of producing prosperity in the years to come. We recognize that there is a need to cut our country's deficit, but emphasize that the needs and concerns of low-income groups should always be taken into account when developing and implementing any budget cuts.

COVERING NEWS FROM TUNISIA & ENNAHDHA

February 1, 2018

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

While attending the World Economic Forum at Davos last week, I was delighted by the level of international support for Tunisia's political and economic transition. Indeed, Tunisia is an open country, and the event provided an excellent opportunity to meet with world leaders both past and present to discuss the challenges and rich opportunities open to Tunisia.

Tunisia's position as the sole success story of the Arab Spring was widely referenced throughout the week at Davos, and the consensus regarding the potential of our country was overwhelming. Although this is a source of great national pride, it is important to remember that as a relatively new democracy we are not immune to teething problems. This was made evident by the recent social unrest in the country. Indeed, Tunisians are not afraid to voice discontent, which famously sparked the Arab Spring and rid Tunisia of a despot following years of rampant cronyism under the Ben Ali regime.

Since this important event we have sought to create a truly democratic society, one that enables our citizens to reach their full potential while enjoying the freedoms that many in the West take for granted, such as national elections, freedom of the press, functional institutions, and most importantly, security.

Despite the testing economic and political conditions following the overthrow of Ben Ali, we have managed to complete several rounds of free and fair elections, implement landmark gender equality laws, draft new laws to encourage foreign investment, and most recently we have agreed on a final date of May 6, 2018 for important municipal elections – the first of their kind in the region.

All these developments are important building blocks for Tunisia's young democracy and the Tunisian people should be proud of having achieved this, seven years after the Arab Spring. In order to further strengthen the Tunisian democracy and stimulate the economy, I urge the Tunisian people to give our unique democratic transition their continuous and full support. It is via the ballot box, and not on the streets, where Tunisians can most effectively voice their opinion on the running of the country.

The Ennahdha Party will continue to work hard to ensure citizens' concerns are represented in government. Only together we can make Tunisia stronger.

COVERING NEWS FROM TUNISIA & ENNAHDHA

March 21, 2018

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

We now have just 46 days until the Tunisian municipal elections. On May 6, Tunisia will take another step towards the implementation of the post-Revolution constitution. However, it can never be said enough, it is not just that the elections take place, but how they take place, that is important.

Ennahdha was steadfast in its support for gender parity on the election lists, and as the only party to put forward candidates in all municipalities, we will be fielding the highest number of female candidates. As a party, we have ensured – as mandated by electoral law – that there is horizontal and vertical parity, with 175 women leading the lists out of 350 in total.

Indeed, our strength in gender equality was recently recognized in the recent meeting of the Arab League in Gammārth, Tunisia. The meeting, entitled Women for Safe Societies in the Arab Region, convened eleven ministers for women's affairs from member states. At the meetings conclusion, it was decided that Tunisia would be the 2018-19 Capital of Arab Women, a direct recognition of the country's progressive politics. We hope that this will strengthen our hand not just domestically, but in our effort to become the regional exemplar for gender equality.

It is in this spirit that we approach the municipal elections in May, which will be the most inclusive the country has ever experienced.

ENNAHDHA & TUNISIA UPDATES

- Ennahdha reaffirms its commitment to continue the struggle alongside Tunisian women to preserve their achievements – March 8
- Ennahdha Party emphasizes the need for all parties to respect the stability of Governmental work and to create a positive environment for the holding of the municipal elections – March 15

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Notable progress has been made in implementing the law around the municipal elections, ensuring the proper functioning of local governance. Amendments to the law have been deposited by Ennahdha, with discussions and voting set to begin on next week in plenary. In particular, the amendments will reinforce the importance of women's role in the elections. Ennahdha is working hard to ensure this law is passed before the end of March, ahead of campaigning beginning on April 14.

The Tunisian Parliament is continuing to negotiate around the selection of members to the Constitutional Court. Three of these four members will have a specialized legal competence, while the remaining member will offer a separate specialty. Negotiations are ongoing, with all involved determined to select the appropriate people. The first member has been elected, a female judge named Roudha Wirshini. The remaining three members will be elected on March 21.

Tunisia's first municipal elections in

38 days

62nd Newsletter

COVERING NEWS FROM TUNISIA & ENNAHDHA

March 29, 2018

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

On March 20 Tunisia celebrated the 62nd anniversary of its independence. A day of national celebration, this event marked the beginning of Tunisia's first republic. The 2011 Revolution marked the beginning of Tunisia's second republic, which aims to build on Tunisia's social and economic achievements while grounding them in a set of new democratic institutions that work for everyone.

Significantly, it is now just 38 days until the country's first municipal elections. Just as Tunisia's independence marked a new beginning, so too will these elections, as they mark the birth of a new decentralized governance framework. Decentralizing power away from the capital is so important because it gives those who have been politically disenfranchised – the young, women, people from marginalized regions – a real stake in the country's future. This is why I passionately urge the country to turn out on May 6 to give a new generation of representatives the mandate they need to deliver local development and prosperity.

Clearly, the support of our international partners is key as Tunisia consolidates its democracy. French President Emmanuel Macron's visit in February is a perfect case in point. Mr. Macron commended Tunisia for having carried out a "cultural revolution" since 2011, as well as having "given the lie to those who say that societies where Islam is present are not compatible with democracy."

The European Union's support is also key, and our political and economic dialogue has continually increased since the establishment of the Privileged Partnership in 2012. Today, the EU is Tunisia's primary trading partner, accounting for 63 percent of our total trade.

Our program of cooperation also extends further afield. In 2018 alone, Tunisia formally extended bilateral relations with countries from Nigeria to China, Spain to Indonesia. Truly demonstrating our openness on the world stage, Equatorial Guinea announced last month that it would soon open an embassy in Tunisia.

The 62nd anniversary of Tunisia's independence is of course a time of celebration. But it is essential that we now look forward. The municipal elections on May 6 will represent yet another step in the fulfillment of our democratic Constitution, and we call on our international partners to continue to support us during this crucial stage of Tunisia's development.

ENNAHDHA & TUNISIA UPDATES

- Ennahdha emphasizes the need for all parties to respect the stability of Governmental work and to create a positive environment for the holding of the municipal elections – March 20, 2018
- Ennahdha expresses solidarity with the French people and calls on the international community to unite against terrorism – March 24, 2018

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Elections for members of the Constitutional Court will be held again at a later date, after parliamentary blocks failed to produce a quorum. Of the four candidates, only one was successfully elected during voting last week.

Tunisia's parliament is in contentious discussions over extending the mandate of the Truth and Dignity Commission, the body tasked with implementing post-revolution transitional justice. The debate centers on whether its mandate should be extended for another year once it expires in June 2018.

Plenary discussions and voting sessions are ongoing this week in the House of the People's Representatives. Under consideration is the Local Governance Code of 1975 which is to be revoked and replaced with an upcoming draft law that will unify all local government organization in one legal framework. The law, known as the Code on Local Authorities, will serve as the basis for Tunisia's first-ever municipal elections. We look forward to reaching consensus, though there are yet more than 400 points to be discussed and amended.

Ennahdha supports preserving the Carthage Declaration, a 2016 agreement between Tunisia's political parties that outlines the goals of the national unity government. However, Ennahdha has called for the formation of a commission to study political performance. The party has also proposed legislative revisions for the economic, political, social, and education sectors.

COVERING NEWS FROM TUNISIA & ENNAHDHA

April 19, 2018

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

On Saturday, Tunisians welcomed the beginning of the campaign for the municipal elections, which will take place on May 6. The first of their kind in the region, the elections will decentralize power to municipalities across the country, empower the previously disenfranchised and represent yet another step in the fulfilment of the post-Revolution Constitution.

Ennahdha Party set off on the campaign trail on April 14, with Party representatives travelling throughout the country to promote the Party's program of economic, social and political reform, and connect with communities on a more personal level to better understand their ideas for the future and motivate them to actively partake in building Tunisia's democracy. Bringing decision-making closer to the people most closely affected is, after all, the very essence of democracy.

Pressing ahead with our commitment to economic reform, Ennahdha was recently pivotal in securing the passing of a very important law in Parliament that promises to bring greater economic dynamism and innovation. On April 2, the Start-up Act, a bill proposed by the Ennahdha Minister for Communication Technologies and Digital Economy, Anouar Maarouf, was approved in Parliament. The Act will make it easier for companies to be created and flourish, and has been received very well domestically – not at all a surprise, given Tunisia's position at number 40 on the 2018 Global Entrepreneurship Index, showing that the country is making solid economic progress.

Tunis was also recently the venue for the Islamic Development Bank's annual meeting – a successful event that convened 75 delegations including 43 finance ministers and high dignitaries. Several agreements were signed between Tunisia and the IDB during the meeting, driven in large part by the work of the Ennahdha Minister for Development, Investment and International Cooperation, Zied Ladhari. These agreements, as Mr. Ladhari has said, will help to address the regional disparities in Tunisia through the financing of different projects in sectors as diverse as energy, education and health.

Last week, I led an Ennahdha Party delegation to Brussels to strengthen key relationships with our friends in Europe. Strengthening Ennahdha's ties with EU decision makers is an essential component of our international outreach, as we continue to address some of the challenges we face; some unique to Tunisia, some common to us all. This was perhaps best demonstrated by my fruitful meeting with Federica Mogherini, High Representative of the European Union for Foreign Affairs and Security Policy, where I expressed Ennahdha's commitment for close cooperation on democratic reforms, economic modernization and migration issues.

And so, as Ennahdha begins its campaigning for the first ever democratic local elections in our country's history, I am excited at what the future holds for our Party and country alike. Implementing decentralization and other deep reforms will be essential in delivering the prosperous and democratic Tunisia for which we all continue to strive.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Tunisia's parliament passed the Start-up Act, an Ennahdha-led initiative that will remove hurdles for entrepreneurs and investors as they found and build their companies. Among the measures included in the law, which was spearheaded by Ennahdha Minister of Communication Technologies and Digital Economy Anouar Maarouf, are:

- Exemption for start-ups from corporate taxes for up to eight years;
- Exemption from capital gains tax on investments made in start-ups;
- Up to one year off from their current jobs (both private and public sector employees), and;
- A salary for up to three founders during the first year of a company's operation.

The law passed without any significant opposition, and has been very well received in Tunisia, particularly among the country's youth.

The Law on Local Governance is under debate in plenary. Although still a work in progress, the draft law represents the next step in laying the necessary foundations for strong, decentralized Tunisian institutions, and we are hopeful it will be passed ahead of the municipal elections on May 6.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Campaigning is well and truly under way ahead of Tunisia's municipal elections on May 6. The elections will be a key milestone in the history of post-Revolution Tunisia, and a starting point for democratically decentralising power down to regional and local authorities.

We launched Ennahdha's campaign on April 14 with a clear message: these elections represent a huge opportunity for strengthening reform and development, and consolidating democracy and freedom. The sheer number and diversity of enthusiastic and hardworking Tunisians who put themselves forward to run on Ennahdha's electoral lists, whether party members or independent, has re-affirmed my belief that the country's appetite for robust, local democracy is extremely strong. The fact that over 50% are young people under 35 also gives great hope for renewal and innovation at the local level.

Democracy is about people, which is why I – alongside other Party representatives – have accompanied our candidates to campaigning events over the past weeks. Everywhere we went, we met the municipalities' inspiring female candidates, in whose ability to drive positive local change I have total confidence. As the head of a party with 50% women and 50% men across all our 350 electoral lists, I am proud to see the emergence of female political leaders across the political spectrum throughout the entire country.

The importance of free and fair elections cannot be understated and, to this end, Ennahdha welcomes the delegation of more than 80 election observers from the European Union. It is in this spirit of fair but firm campaigning that Ennahdha will continue to visit Tunisia's many regions, better understanding peoples' local needs and demands as we go.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

The Law on Local Governance has successfully passed through Parliament. With the persistent and committed support and participation of Ennahdha MP's, the Code on Local Governance was passed on Thursday April 26. The Code, which lays out the responsibilities of regional and local councils, is an important achievement that sets the foundations for the consolidation of democracy and transfer of power to Tunisia's municipalities. Among other aspects, the new Code includes amendments to municipal powers, giving them greater powers to take decisions concerning local development without needing to go back to central authority. The Code also guarantees the financial and administrative independence of local authorities and ensures that the central state cannot directly intervene in municipal decisions unless through judicial proceedings. In addition, the Code encourages the principle of participatory democracy, and obliges local authorities to involve citizens in local decision-making.

Covering news from Tunisia and Ennahdha

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

The Ennahdha Party is honored to have earned the most seats of all parties in the country's first democratic municipal elections, which took place on May 6. A crucial next-step in the fulfilment of the post-Revolution constitution, we congratulate all the candidates, observers and assessors on achieving a free and fair election process.

Over the past months and more regularly during the three weeks of the campaign, Ennahdha representatives travelled the breadth of the country to gain a better understanding of what Tunisian people want from their municipal governments, as well as better define their most pressing concerns. Our message – that elected municipal governments are vital to the democratic representation of every Tunisian citizen – has clearly resonated with the people, and we are committed to live up to our people's expectations.

Building on the party's history of inclusivity, our new representatives comprise a wide range of demographics. The elected municipal councils count 47 percent women and 43 percent of people under the age of 35, a true reflection of Tunisia's diversity. We have every confidence that the Ennahdha councilors will represent their municipalities with the utmost integrity and ambition.

Tunisia's recent political history has been, in part, defined by consensus and dialogue. In light of these elections, we look forward to working in partnership with all the elected candidates in the new authorities across the country, united around a common goal: a better, more prosperous Tunisia for all.

With the committed support of Ennahdha MP's, the Code on Local Governance has been passed before the elections. This Code lays out the responsibilities of regional and local councils, empowering localities to make effective decisions without referring to central authority. It is now that we will see this Law bear fruit, as the newly elected governments will be able to get to work without any more delays.

Last week's election was a victory for all Tunisians. However, as President of Ennahdha, I have no doubt that our Party's new representatives will successfully lay the foundation for a Tunisia that is prosperous, free and progressive. If we can achieve this, it will be for the benefit of the whole society.

ENNAHDHA & TUNISIA UPDATES

Ennahdha condemns the opening of the American embassy in Jerusalem and the crimes of killing and detention committed against the Palestinian people

In an unprecedented move, the U.S. administration on May 14, 2018, implemented its decision to move its embassy to Jerusalem in a flagrant violation of UN resolutions and international consensus, constituting a new Nakba for Palestinians and providing the Israeli occupation with a cover to further escalate its attacks on Palestinians in Jerusalem, Gaza and the West Bank, and expand its raids on the holy sanctuary (Haram Sharif) in Jerusalem and its attempts to take full control of the city and erase its Arab and Muslim history.

The Israeli occupation committed a massacre today against the "Return demonstration" in Gaza, killing dozens and injuring hundreds of Palestinians.

Ennahdha Party:

- Strongly condemns the opening of the U.S. embassy in Jerusalem and considers it a clear violation of UN resolutions and of the Palestinian people's right to liberation from occupation and establishing its independent state with Jerusalem as its capital.
- Condemns the crimes of killing and detention committed by the Israeli occupation against the heroic Palestinian people.
- Calls for the protection of Jerusalemites and of all Palestinians from the injustice and attacks of the occupation and calls for the activation of an effective Arab, Muslim, international and human role in supporting the steadfastness of Palestinians in Jerusalem and Palestine.
- Calls for lifting the blockade on Gaza and rebuilding it and putting an end to the injustice suffered by its people.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Tunisia's parliament reached a quorum this week on both the Social Justice Law and the Law for Constitutional Bodies. The draft laws will be transferred back to the Consensus Committee for further approval.

The Rights and Liberties and Foreign Affairs Committee, Chaired by Ennahdha MP Naoufel Eljammali, held a hearing this week on racial discrimination, in preparation for a law against racism that will be unique in North Africa.

Members of the Tunisian Assembly of the Representatives of the People will soon vote again for the remaining three members of the Constitutional Court as the parliament is registering candidacies. The first member was elected several weeks before the municipal elections.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Ennahdha is delighted to announce that Souad Abderrahim, who ran on an Ennahdha list during May's municipal elections, has been elected as the first female mayor of Tunis, making her the first elected female mayor in the Arab world. Of the 68 female mayors elected in the 349 municipalities, 42 are from Ennahdha – an impressive 62 percent. Each of our female mayors ran inspiring campaigns, always epitomizing the party's plurality and embrace of modern values. It is for this reason that we have no doubt that they will all be effective and tireless representatives of Tunisian people of all political persuasions.

Aside from progress in gender equality, Ennahdha continues to build broader momentum in the wake of May's municipal elections. The party is delighted to have the presidencies of 132 municipalities, including the second city and economic capital, Sfax, and the cultural capital, Kairouan.

Elsewhere, the World Bank has approved a new $500 million loan to support economic reform in Tunisia followed by a further $249m loan tranche instalment from the IMF. Ennahdha has always been clear that Tunisia's route to prosperity is best mapped out with the support of our international partners and friends, and this financial support is a welcome development as we seek to attract private investment and provide a safety net to the most vulnerable in society.

Intense discussions continue to be held around Carthage II, the document that determines Tunisia's economic and social priorities. Ennahdha's position remains clear: governmental stability and consensus is necessary to ensure the country can continue to devote its primary attention to an ambitious and necessary program of political, economic and social reform.

Despite the challenges which any country undergoing reform can expect to face, Tunisia has made exceptional strides in the first half of 2018. In addition to holding the region's first democratic municipal elections, the Ennahdha-led Startup Act is well positioned to instill an entrepreneurial spirit in the country. A separate law against racial discrimination, also spearheaded by Ennahdha, continues to make progress through Parliament. Alongside economic reform, these legislative developments act as a positive platform upon which to build from in the remainder of 2018, ahead of next year's legislative and presidential elections.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Tunisian parliament is taking steps to enshrine in law the requirement of companies in both the public and private sectors to commit funds for the preservation of the environment as well as social program in the cities where they are based. Ennahdha was instrumental in drafting the law, which would allow companies to deduct giving from their taxes. The measure will ensure the contribution of funds to cultural programs, as well as to the health and education sectors.

An Ennahdha-proposed bill would require politicians and government employees to declare all types of revenue and priority. The law is designed to encourage transparency and accountability for public officials, as well as reinforce the country's already-existing anti-corruption measures. Politicians will also have to declare their revenue after leaving their official positions. The bill is expected to attract strong support in Parliament.

Parliament is in early discussions with civil society on a bill that would update protection of personal data for Tunisians. Such a bill would follow a previous transparency law which guarantees transparency and free access to data for Tunisian citizens.

COVERING NEWS FROM TUNISIA & ENNAHDHA

March-March 22, 2018

A WORD FROM RACHID GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Four years on from the adoption of the post-revolution Constitution, one primary step remains in the effort to achieve a truly decentralized Tunisian government. On May 6, 2018, the country will implement ~~decentralization~~ decentralization-in-practice through our first municipal elections – a significant landmark not just for Tunisia, but also for the wider region.

The revolution in 2011 marked the beginning of Tunisia's development into a regional democratic exemplar. In 2017, several laws – such as the landmark legislation combatting violence against women – were implemented at the national level, with Ennahdha representatives habitually driving change. The municipal elections are both significant and exciting because they will allow the country to extend this programme of reform to the local level. ~~Ennahdha and Nidaa Tounes were the only parties to submit lists of candidates for municipal elections across all 350 constituencies before the February 22 deadline. February 22 was the deadline to submit lists of candidates for the municipal elections, with only Ennahdha and Nidaa Tounes able to submit our lists across all 350 constituencies.~~ This demonstrates the strength of the party across the entire country.

However, it is not just that the elections take place, but how they take place, that is important. Ennahdha is extremely proud to announce that we have nominated a member of the Tunisian Jewish community, Simon Selame, as an independent representative for Monastir in the country's upcoming elections. Although Ennahdha is proud to have Muslim origins, we are a modern political party that is open to people from all religious backgrounds, as Mr Selame clearly ~~recognizes~~ recognizes. He stated that he would not have accepted the nomination from any other party.

Meanwhile, Ennahdha representative Meherzia Labidi has visited the interior regions of Tunisia to speak with Tunisian women and motivate them to become active in politics. In the municipal elections, approximately 50 percent of local seats will have to be occupied while one candidate out of the first 10 on a list must be an individual with physical disabilities. Collectively, these measures contribute to making these elections, not only the first of its kind in Tunisia, but also the most diverse Tunisia has ever seen in our history.

Finally, I am pleased at the news that British global travel company Thomas Cook has resumed flights from the UK to Tunisia, which follows from a successful visit by UK Security Minister Ben Wallace MP to the country a fortnight ago. The first set of flights leaving the UK on Tuesday, February 13 were fully booked, which I trust signals the resumption of interest in visiting our country, a strong touristic relationship between our two countries. Tunisia is a culturally-rich country with renowned sites from antiquity and beautiful stretches of Mediterranean coastline, an abundance to offer holidaymakers, and I wish all British tourists an enjoyable stay.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Human Rights High Authority – Ennahdha MPs are working hard to introduce bring about the legislation which will allow and give powers to that would create a new Commission on Human Rights. This ambitious Commission, which Ennahdha is determined to see implemented in 2018, will be able to visit any place which is hiding or witnessing any human rights transgression, strengthening the fabric of civil society so essential to the post-revolution Tunisia.

Led by Ennahdha, Tunisia is implementing a new law on racism. Ennahdha MP Mrs ~~bood~~ who is the only black woman in the Assembly, brought this Bill introduced this bill to ~~meo~~ parliament. Though Article 21 of the Constitution makes all citizens equal without discrimination, no specific mention of racism is made. This law, which will also ~~escalate the~~ increase punishments for crimes involving racism ~~abuse~~, will ~~ackle~~ address this shortcoming.

Commented [MW1]: Takouel – could you please insert the name of the Ennahdha MP who brought this law to parliament. Thank you.

Ennahdha's Minister of Communication Technologies and Digital Economy Anouar Maarouf is leading a discussion with the Committee of Industry and Technology in Parliament on a new law. Parliament is planning an ICT day for 5th March 5.

Commented [MW2]: Hi Takouel – could you please add a very brief line on what this new law sets out to achieve for the start-up industry, as discussed on the call with Ms Labidi. Thank you.

Commented [MW3]: ICT day's primary objective?

Covering news from Tunisia and Ennahdha

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

The Ennahdha Party is pleased to have won in 155 out of 350 municipalities in the recent municipal elections. While the elections were an historic milestone for Tunisian democracy, focus has now shifted to the national issues vital to Tunisia's development.

The mandate of the independent and constitutionally-backed Truth and Dignity Commission (IVD), created in 2014 to address human rights violations committed by the pre-Revolution regime and provide justice to victims, formally came to a close this week. Tunisia's parliament decided that the IVD would have to end its work and release a final report by the end of 2018. At the same time, on Wednesday, May 29, we witnessed in Gabès an historic event: the first trial from the tyrannous years of the 1990s involving an Ennahdha Party activist, Kamel Matmati, who was killed under torture by the Ben Ali regime. Our position is clear: transitional justice is an important component of Tunisia's healing process, and the Commission's work must be able to continue. Tunisians must understand the past and reconcile with it so we can move forward together.

A committee of experts comprised of political party leaders and civil society groups and known as the National Symposium last week agreed to implement 63 'points' on social and economic reforms as part of an updated Carthage Declaration. However, the signatories to the Symposium, which is tasked with determining the priorities of the National Unity Government, failed to reach an agreement on the immediate future of the Tunisian Prime Minister. While some groups have called for a complete government reshuffle, Ennahdha has expressed opposition to pursuing such a course at this time. A reshuffle would run counter to the country's interests, which right now call for economic and political stability.

Just as Tunisia has implemented reforms on a platform of consensus and dialogue, it is essential that our international partners continue to support the country's progress towards economic and political stability. It is in this context of international collaboration that Tunisia can drive the economic prosperity the country is capable of achieving.

ENNAHDHA & TUNISIA UPDATES

Statement: Ennahdha Renaissance party supports the findings of the Committee of Experts and stresses the importance of government stability – May 24

The Ennahdha Renaissance Party Executive Committee held its regular meeting on Wednesday, May 23, 2018 under the supervision of its President Rached Ghannouchi. The Committee reviewed a number of files related to the general situation in the country, and expressed the following:

1. The Party supports the findings of the Committee of Experts after several meetings and consensus on 63 points out of 64, all of which stressed the projects to be activated, and the necessary reform measures to enhance the national economy, rebalance public finances, stimulate growth and investment, which would contribute to job creation and the development of marginalized parts of the country. It also stresses the urgent need for the government to enact major reforms.
2. The Party stresses the importance of governmental stability, which is not affected by the necessary partial reshuffle, and the importance of continuing the dialogue approach in addressing the country's issues. The Party believes that the forum of the Presidents of parties and organizations signatories of the Carthage Agreement, under the President's supervision is an appropriate framework to overcome the differences regarding the future status of the government.
3. The Party reiterates its commitment to the formation of municipal councils on the basis of the commitment to achieve the interests of citizens, away from political disputes, and on the criteria of efficiency and placing public interest before every consideration in order to ensure their effectiveness and ability to carry out the tasks entrusted to them, including local development and providing local services.

Ennahdha Renaissance Party Statement following the 20th Session of its Consultative Council – May 28

On Sunday, May 27 2018, Ennahdha Renaissance Party Consultative Council held its 20th session in Tunis, during which the general situation in the country and the results of the recent municipal elections were examined, in addition to the negotiation results presented by the Committee of experts of the Carthage Agreement 2. After hearing reports from the Executive Bureau, Ennahdha Renaissance Consultative Council:

1. Sends its greetings to all Tunisian people, State institutions, the Independent High Authority for Elections (ISIE), all political parties, civil society and independent organizations who have contributed to the success of the national local elections. It also calls for deepening consolidation and consensus among all the winners in order to install stable and efficient municipal councils that provide the best services to citizens and strengthen local administration and local democracy.

2. Appreciates the efforts of the President of the Republic Beji Caid Essebsi in supporting the dialogue of Carthage Agreement 2 and his keenness in ensuring the powers of State institutions to enhance our country's leading role and uphold the rule of law.

3. The Council also approved the 63 points contained in the Carthage Agreement 2 and mandated the Party President to continue his dialogue with other political and social parties in a manner that would ensure stability and support the path of national unity and the concordance that characterized our Tunisian experience over the past years.

EXECUTIVE AND LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

On May 24, MPs continued to discuss the Law Against Racial Discrimination in the Rights and Liberties and Foreign Affairs committee, chaired by Ennahdha Minister Naoufel El Jammali. The Committee is approaching the law in a comprehensive manner, considering any discriminations which may unfairly impact a certain group, while guaranteeing human rights protections. The Law, which has achieved consensus in Parliament, will be the first of its kind in the Maghreb.

The Commission of Agriculture, Food Security, Trade and Related Services, chaired by Ennahdha MP Zoubair Rajbi, held a session on Thursday, May 24, 2018, during which the Committee's report on the draft law on health and safety, quality of food products and animal feed was presented and approved unanimously by MPs.

On May 22, Parliament continued to review the 2013-2015 budget for Tunisia, as discussions around how best to structure the country's finances continue to take place. This is an important step for the critical aim of ensuring stability as Tunisia enters a period of political, economic and social reform.

Parliament continues to vote on the third protocol on the convention of children's rights. This convention will build on the region's first Law on Violence Against Women passed last year, and will cover an array of additional rights for children.

MPs in a plenary session are currently identifying how to apportion investment and development funds to certain regions of Tunisia. It is anticipated that funds will largely be focused on areas in the South and South-West of the country.

Covering news from Tunisia and Ennahdha

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

Ennahdha is delighted to announce that Souad Abderrahim, who ran on an Ennahdha list during May's municipal elections, has been elected as the first female mayor of Tunis, making her the first elected female mayor in the Arab world. Of the 68 female mayors elected in the 349 municipalities, 42 are from Ennahdha - an impressive 62 percent. Each of our female mayors ran inspiring campaigns, always epitomizing the party's plurality and embrace of modern values. It is for this reason that we have no doubt that they will all be effective and tireless representatives of Tunisian people of all political persuasions.

Aside from progress in gender equality, Ennahdha continues to build broader momentum in the wake of May's municipal elections. The party is delighted to have the presidencies of 132 municipalities, including the second city and economic capital, Sfax, and the cultural capital, Kairouan.

Elsewhere, the World Bank has approved a new $500 million loan to support economic reform in Tunisia followed by a further $249m loan tranche instalment from the IMF. Ennahdha has always been clear that Tunisia's route to prosperity is best mapped out with the support of our international partners and friends, and this financial support is a welcome development as we seek to attract private investment and provide a safety net to the most vulnerable in society.

Intense discussions continue to be held around Carthage II, the document that determines Tunisia's economic and social priorities. Ennahdha's position remains clear: governmental stability and consensus is necessary to ensure the country can continue to devote its primary attention to an ambitious and necessary program of political, economic and social reform.

Despite the challenges which any country undergoing reform can expect to face, Tunisia has made exceptional strides in the first half of 2018. In addition to holding the region's first democratic municipal elections, the Ennahdha-led Startup Act is well positioned to instill an entrepreneurial spirit in the country. A separate law against racial discrimination, also spearheaded by Ennahdha, continues to make progress through Parliament. Alongside economic reform, these legislative developments act as a positive platform upon which to build from in the remainder of 2018, ahead of next year's legislative and presidential elections.

For more information about Ennahdha's results in the municipal elections please see this infographic.

EXECUTIVE & LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Tunisian parliament is taking steps to enshrine in law the requirement of companies in both the public and private sectors to commit funds for the preservation of the environment as well as social program in the cities where they are based. Ennahdha was instrumental in drafting the law, which would allow companies to deduct giving from their taxes. The measure will ensure the contribution of funds to cultural programs, as well as to the health and education sectors.

An Ennahdha-proposed bill would require politicians and government employees to declare all types of revenue and priority. The law is designed to encourage transparency and accountability for public officials, as well as reinforce the country's already-existing anti-corruption measures. Politicians will also have to declare their revenue after leaving their official positions. The bill is expected to attract strong support in Parliament.

Parliament is in early discussions with civil society on a bill that would update protection of personal data for Tunisians. Such a bill would follow a previous transparency law which guarantees transparency and free access to data for Tunisian citizens.

Covering news from Tunisia and Ennahdha

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

In what is a significant year ahead for Tunisia with parliamentary and presidential elections set for 2019, I would like to reflect on some of the important developments affecting the country today.

As recent headlines have shown, Tunisian President Beji Caïd Essebsi recently suggested that Ennahdha had chosen to break ties with him and his party, Nidaa Tounes. Whilst we may have differences over some areas of policy – which is itself normal in any healthy democracy – we stressed that dialogue and consensus remains best course of action to resolve those differences.

Unfortunately, the president made this pronouncement not simply because of a policy disagreement, but because Ennahdha has declined to support his calls for the Prime Minister to step down and for change of government to step in. Ennahdha remains committed to the notion that changing the government one year before parliamentary and presidential elections would at best cause unnecessary disruption, and at worst prevent crucial reforms from being implemented for the good of the economy.

Although we do not agree with the president on this point, we still value the role he has played in Tunisia's democratic transition and remain committed to dialogue and consensus between all political stakeholders.

Indeed, political stability and democratic consolidation was a key focal point during the recent EU-Tunisia joint committee meeting that took place in Tunis on September 18. The mixed parliamentary commission spoke highly of the effectiveness of May's municipal elections, as well as post-Revolution laws strengthening political transparency. Pleasingly, those present stressed the utility of cooperation between the EU and Tunisian parliaments. Just as dialogue is essential in Tunisia, so too will our country benefit from collaborating closely with our European friends.

In recent weeks, there has been much discussion around equal inheritance rights in Tunisia, proposed by the President's Individual Freedoms and Equality Committee. This is a sensitive issue for many families across Tunisia, and Ennahdha sees great value in a national dialogue on the issue to allow us to reach a conclusion best for all in society. Dialogue, after all, has contributed to strong economic and political progress in Tunisia since the 2011 revolution.

As a party we look forward to engaging with this legislation when it is presented to parliament. It does, however, remain our conviction that Tunisians should be free to live their lives in accordance with the fundamental tenets of their religious beliefs.

On the economic front, I am delighted to confirm that Tunisia's GDP is at its highest level since 2016. Preliminary results from the second quarter of 2018 confirm this uptrend, and suggest that the country could achieve its target of 3 percent growth. Although tourism and agriculture are driving results, it is extremely important that Tunisia's economy diversifies. I am pleased that a wide range of sectors, including agribusiness, textiles and chemicals, are contributing positively to these results.

All of this should rightly fill Tunisians, as well as our international partners, with optimism as the country's economy enters the final quarter of 2018.

ENNAHDHA AND TUNISIA UPDATES

Ennahdha calls for continued dialogue with the President - September 25

Following the interview conducted with the President of the Republic on Al-Hiwar al-Tounisi channel on Monday September 24, 2018 during which a number of important issues of concern to national public opinion, Ennahdha Party:

1. Commends the President of the Republic's commitment to reassuring Tunisians regarding holding the next presidential and legislative elections on the agreed dates, which would strengthen the democratic transition process and strengthen internal and external confidence in #Tunisia.

2. Reaffirms its commitment to consensus with the President of the Republic and its appreciation of the national role he has played since the beginning of the revolution in order to establish a culture of consultation and dialogue between political parties as opposed to monopolization, exclusion and conflict. Ennahdha Party had reacted positively to that approach since the Paris meeting, as embodied at all phases during which the President of the Republic found nothing but support and cooperation. The Tunisian exception owes its existence to the path of consensus-building which remains the ideal basis for our country's stability and managing differences within the framework of national responsibility and mutual respect.

3. Stresses the difference in points of view on a number of issues faced by the country, foremost amongst which is the government's stability, does not mean Ennahdha's abandonment of the robust relationship with the President of the Republic, but is rather part of the essence of democratic life and among the requirements of the critical phase and immense economic and social challenges preoccupying national public opinion.

Ennahdha stands with those affected by the natural disaster - September 23

Many areas of #Nabeul, Benarous, Sousse and other parts of the country witnessed exceptionally high levels of rainfall last month. Valleys were flooded leading to a rise in water levels which resulted in casualties, road blocks, traffic disruptions and the flooding of a many homes, establishments and institutions. In the face of the calamity that has struck these areas, Ennahdha Party, while it values all the efforts made by the National Office of Civil Protection (NOCP), the #Tunisia National Guard, the Army, the Security Forces and all the parties involved in reducing human losses and material damages:

1. Pays respect to the souls of the victims and offers its condolences to their families and relatives, and wishes a speedy recovery for those that have been wounded.
2. Salutes the movement of broad solidarity among Tunisian citizens which reflected the depth of social cohesion and the values of humanity and civilisation.
3. Calls upon its activists and supporters to attend to those affected and to support the efforts of the government and civil society.
4. Calls upon the Government to take all measures required to mitigate the impact of the disaster and reduce its negative effect on the lives of the afflicted and to promptly assess the damages.

Ennahdha's statement on recent calls for the postponement of 2019 elections -

August 30

Following the doubts raised regarding holding the presidential and legislative elections as scheduled for late 2019, Ennahdha, out of its full commitment to preserving the democratic transition process:

1. Affirms that freedom from dictatorship and the embodiment of free popular will are realised through holding elections within their set constitutional deadlines, t hereby completing the establishment of our democratic system. Without elections, there is no legitimacy; and any questioning of the electoral process is a deviation from the path of democratic transition.

2. Expresses its pride in #Tunisia's well-established democratic path, which consolidates freedom which was a principal demand of the revolution of the people of Tunisia in 2011, with the full commitment of our political elite to democracy and to the peaceful alternation of power.

3. Reiterates its commitment to consensus before and after the elections regardless of the results, based on the outcome of the ballot box and in light of the need of our young democratic experience to broad partnership in order to manage public affairs and ensure the continued success of the Tunisian model.

Ennahdha's statement on National Women's Day - August 13

Tunisian women and the whole Tunisian people proudly celebrate today the anniversary of the 13th of August, 1956, the promulgation date of the Personal Status Code.

On the occasion of celebrating this anniversary, Ennahdha Party:

1. Congratulates all Tunisian women and men inside and outside the country, and salutes the leading role played by Tunisian women in all fields in order to build the new Tunisia.

2. Congratulates the Tunisian people in general, and in particular, Tunisian women, for assuming local leadership within the elected municipal councils, as members, mayors, or heads of committees.

3. Calls for further empowerment of Tunisian women and supporting their participation in decision-making, and for the adoption of horizontal and vertical gender parity in the coming legislative elections in order to further strengthen women's contribution to leading change and renewal in our country.

4. Calls for the adoption of the necessary mechanisms and measures in order to activate the law on the prevention of violence against women so as to enable us to put an end to this dangerous phenomenon.

EXECUTIVE & LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

The Tunisian parliament returned from recess on October 2.

Ennahdha's Naoufel El Jammai, Chairman of the Committee on Rights and Freedoms and Foreign Relations, addressed MPs in a plenary session on October 2 regarding key issues around the agenda for the new Parliamentary term. Mr Jammali informed MPs that one area of focus will be the new National Instance for Human Rights, an institution that Mr Jammali's Committee has developed. Ennahdha considered it important to present this progress to the new Parliament before the elections of the new Committee Chairs, estimated to be within one month.

A Statement from the Ennahdha Party

Ennahdha Party statement following the terrorist attack on Habib Bourguiba Avenue

Tunis - October 29, 2018

On Monday, October 29, 2018, Habib Bourguiba Avenue in the capital Tunis witnessed a treacherous attack on a security patrol located in the vicinity, resulting in a number of casualties.

Following this criminal attempt, and pending the Ministry of Interior's disclosure of the circumstances, the Ennahdha Party:

1. Condemns this cowardly terrorist attack against our national security forces which targeted the Habib Bourguiba Avenue and what it represents for the Tunisian people, from symbolizing the values of freedom and democracy to being a public space for leisure and entertainment.
2. Strongly condemns the perpetrators and all those who stand behind them or assist them.
3. Calls on Tunisian citizens to uphold and strengthen national unity and to stand with the security and military institutions to continue their efforts in the name of building a peaceful and democratic Tunisia, and as a clear and appropriate response to all the villainous forces that seek to harm Tunisia and its democratic experience.
4. Reaffirms once again that there is no future for terrorism in Tunisia, thanks to the solidarity and awareness of the Tunisian people, and thanks to the determination of our security and military forces in confronting terrorists and pursuing them wherever they may be.

Ennahdha Party statement on Parliament's approval of the government reshuffle

Tunis – November 14, 2018

With the Parliamentary confirmation of Prime Minister Chahed's reshuffle, Ennahdha calls for all partners in the Unity Government to dedicate their energies on delivering the national reform agenda to revitalize Tunisia's economy.

The Unity Government must overcome differences and deliver real progress through constructive discussions for the sake of future of the Tunisian people. We welcome the opportunity to work with our colleagues in government to strengthen democratic institutions, engage in effective dialogue about key issues and work through differences within the established constitutional framework, and build a strong, secure and prosperous future for all Tunisians.

The Ennahdha Party welcomes the appointment of:

- Ms Sayida Ounissi as Minister of Employment and Vocational Training
- Mr Habib Debbabi as Secretary of State for SMEs in the Ministry of Industry and SMEs
- Ms Bisma Jebali as Secretary of State in the Ministry of Local Government and the Environment
- Mr Ahmed Gaaloul as Secretary of State for Sports in the Ministry of Youth and Sports

Ennahdha also welcomes the reappointment of Mr Zied Ladhari as Minister for Development, Investment and International Cooperation, Mr Taoufik Rajhi as Minister for Economic Reform, Mr Anouar Maarouf as Minister of IT and the Digital Economy, Mr Ridha Saidi as Minister Advisor to the Prime Minister and Mr Khalil Amiri as Secretary of State for Scientific Research.

In addition, we welcome the appointment of Rene Trabelsi as the new Minister of Tourism - the third member of the country's Jewish minority to serve in the Cabinet - and look forward to working with him and other key Cabinet members. Mr. Trabelsi's appointment is reflective of the inclusion and tolerance that remain critical in a democratic and stable Tunisia.

A Statement from the Ennahdha Party

Ennahdha statement on false allegations by the Popular Front

Tunis - November 26, 2018

Ennahdha is the Tunisian Muslim democrat political party representing reform, democracy, progress and opportunity for all Tunisians. The party currently holds four ministerial offices and has been part of every democratic Government since the revolution in Tunisia in 2011.

Activities such as those claimed by the Popular Front's 'Defence Committee' would never be undertaken by anyone who believes in Ennahdha's core principles. There is no truth in these claims and we completely refute them. They are pure fabrications by a politicized self-appointed extra-judicial body that is undermining the legal process by continuously seeking to interfere, pressurize and question the integrity of the judiciary, in order to tarnish and demonize a political rival.

The manner in which these false claims have come forward not only undermines the democratic process, but also the transparency and the independence of the judiciary for which Tunisians have fought bravely since 2011. At a time when the country should be coming together to support our institutions and the strengthening of our economy, these false allegations undermine the progress the Government is taking to re-energize the Tunisian economy and grow our democracy. Rached Ghannouchi, President of Ennahdha said: "For those who believe that undemocratic means can be used to exclude political rivals, let them not forget that our hard won freedoms and democracy are a beacon of hope that Tunisians will not allow to be extinguished."

We will continue to work with our partners to uphold an inclusive, democratic and prosperous society and a better future for all Tunisians.

A WORD FROM RACHED GHANNOUCHI

President and Co-Founder of the ENNAHDHA PARTY

With parliamentary and presidential elections set for 2019, Tunisia is at the threshold of a momentous year in its history. Along with preparation for the elections, Tunisia is establishing a number of key institutions and legal texts that further entrench and consolidate its democratic system.

On October 9, the Tunisian parliament, under the guidance of Dr. Naoufel Eljammali MP, then chair of the Rights and Liberties and Foreign Affairs committee, passed the "Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination" Act. As the first Arab and Muslim country to abolish slavery in 1846, Tunisia is now one of the first in the region to criminalize racism. By defining and criminalizing racial discrimination, this law is a significant step toward a just and equitable future for all Tunisians.

Parliament's approval of a separate law establishing a National Human Rights Commission also moves Tunisia ever closer to the ideals set out in its 2014 constitution. This new independent body, mandated under the constitution, will have broad power to monitor for human rights violations, including through visits to detention centers, prisons, and public educational, health and social institutions. The commission's unanimous approval by all lawmakers present at the vote signals an encouraging cross-party commitment to mechanisms that protect all our futures. Comprising judges, psychologists, lawyers and members of Tunisian civil society, the commission is designed to represent the values of equality, justice and political inclusion that sparked the 2011 Revolution.

The Ennahdha Party Annual Conference on October 26–27 brought together party members and leaders from across the country to discuss key policy issues and Ennahdha's vision for Tunisia in the coming years. The conference was, in particular, an opportunity to engage newly elected mayors from Ennahdha and give central importance to local issues within Ennahdha's vision of democratic governance.

To bridge the gaps in Tunisian society, we must also pursue reconciliation and national unity. The approval of a new cabinet by parliament on November 12 will undoubtedly help to achieve this goal, providing a basis for stable government of coalition and much-needed economic reforms. Having suffered under Tunisia's two former authoritarian regimes, Ennahdha understands the power of national dialogue and the need for forgiveness to overcome division. We therefore call on Parliament to adopt a reconciliation law, which would apply to cases in which offenders admit their crimes, reveal the truth and apologize to and compensate their victims. Only by coming together can we hope to build a democratic, united and prosperous Tunisia.

ENNAHDHA PARTY CONFERENCE UPDATE

Excerpts from Ennahdha Party President Rached Ghannouchi's Opening Speech to the 2018 Annual Party Conference - October 27

Ladies and gentlemen,

Esteemed guests,

We are pleased to inaugurate the activities of the Ennahdha Party's second annual conference, which will deal with several important national and party matters. The holding of this conference will provide a space for dialogue and consultation, and a platform for scrutinizing the party's policies and priorities.

This conference also takes place between two important moments in our democratic transition: the moment when our country successfully completed its first local elections on May 6, 2018, and the moment we are approaching with the second legislative and presidential elections at the end of 2019.

Our success in the recent local elections marks the beginning of a new test of our ability to strengthen local governance, and to bring forth a talented generation of grassroots leaders, in which young people and women hold a significant proportion of senior positions. This reflects our conviction that empowering youth and women and opening doors for them to assume public office is a key priority.

Our country has been living through a political crisis for some time that has weakened the public landscape and deepened the difficulties of our democratic transition, which are mainly the continuation of structural economic challenges. Major reforms have been delayed in many sectors and institutions, despite the remarkable improvement in many economic indicators, the recovery in the tourism sector, and an improved trade balance.

Since the Carthage 2 dialogue, Ennahdha has clearly expressed its position on this crisis, stressing the country's need for political stability, improved government performance on economic and social issues, progress on major reforms, and combating corruption.

Through active diplomacy within the framework of our country's foreign policy, Ennahdha has sought to promote Tunisia as an attractive destination for investment and trade. This outreach has also sought to strengthen Tunisia's relations with a number of neighboring and friendly countries, particularly in North Africa and the Arab and Muslim worlds. Tunisian-African relations must be taken seriously as Tunisia's future lies in Africa. For this purpose, we call for the creation of a ministry or department specifically focused on African relations.

Ennahdha are also forming a team of experts from across the country to prepare a comprehensive economic and social vision for Tunisia 2030. We will present this vision to Tunisia within our electoral manifesto for 2019. This vision will present a strategic approach drawing on our country's points of strength including its exceptional geostrategic position, enlightened cultural and civilizational heritage, advanced and competent human resources, and constructive and fruitful international relations.

We want this vision to draw the outlines of the path towards an historic leap on the economic, developmental, social, financial and civilizational levels, achieving our dream of a prosperous, strong and shining Tunisia.

In its transition to democracy, Tunisia has achieved a great deal despite the difficulties and obstacles it has faced. This is thanks to the choice of dialogue as the primary approach to the management of public affairs, and consensus, which Ennahdha considers to be the best means to achieving national progress.

Our democratic transition will continue. But it needs more time, stability and dialogue in order to fully achieve its objectives – freedom, dignity and development. In this context, it is the responsibility of political parties to enhance their contribution to public governance, to understand society's problems, to provide appropriate solutions to Tunisian women and men, and to improve their standard of living, especially vulnerable and marginalized groups and deprived regions.

Ennahdha Renaissance Party President,

Rached Ghannouchi

EXECUTIVE & LEGISLATIVE UPDATES

Racial Discrimination Law - With the support of Ennahdha, the Tunisian parliament passed the "Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination" Act on October 9. This law criminalizes racial abuse and discrimination against Tunisia's ethnic minorities, especially the 10-15 percent of Tunisians who identify as black. Those convicted of racist speech will face one month of prison time and a fine of $350, while incitement to racial hatred, racist threats or membership of a racist organization carries a prison sentence of between one and three years, and fines of $185-$1,110.

Human Rights Authority - The Tunisian parliament have also fulfilled a major promise of the 2014 constitution by unanimously approving the establishment of an official human rights authority. Under the Basic Law approved on Tuesday, October 16, the rights commission will have a nine-member board chosen by parliament, including two judges, a lawyer, a doctor, three psychologists and two members of civil society organizations.

Cabinet Reshuffle - On November 6, Prime Minister Youssef Chahed announced a proposed cabinet reshuffle, subject to the approval of Parliament. On November 12, Parliament approved the following Ennahdha members to the following positions:

- Ms. Sayida Ounissi as Minister of Employment and Vocational Training
- Mr. Habib Debbabi as Secretary of State for SMEs in the Ministry of Employment and Vocational Training
- Mr. Ahmed Gaaloul as Secretary of State of Youth and Sports in the Ministry of Sports
- Ms. Besma Jebali as Secretary of State in the Ministry of Local Government and the Environment

Ennahdha also welcomes the reappointment of Mr. Zied Ladhari as Minister for Development, Investment and International Cooperation, Mr. Anouar Maarouf as Minister of IT and Communication, and Mr. Khalil Amiri as Secretary of State for Scientific Research.

2019 Budget Approved - On the December 10, Tunisia's parliament approved a budget for 2019. This budget will impose no new taxes on Tunisian citizens, and lowers taxes on the vital technology, textiles, engineering and pharmaceutical sectors. Taxes on bank profits were also raised from 35 percent to 40 percent to provide more funding for social and economic reforms.
